The Village News, February 16, 2026

In late February, signs of spring start to appear as days grow longer and sunsets come after 5:00 pm. On recent wetlands walk in Massachusetts, the first flower of the season were spotted.....skunk cabbage. Though not attractive and known for its smell, this unique plant generates heat to melt nearby snow and ice. It's identifiable by a hooded spathe around the spadix, with large green leaves appearing soon after. Despite its odor, it's a welcome sign of growth during this time of year! (From the Editor's Corner)
