

Floyd Todd (2020)

Floyd was born to loving parents and grew up in the rural community of Rostraver Township, located thirty miles south of Pittsburgh. Five years later, his sister Judy was born. Parental encouragement and a talented music instructor's guidance led Floyd to become a decent saxophone player at an early age. He played in the high school marching band, several regional concert bands, dance bands, and the Blue Band. Floyd pursued his education at Penn State, majoring in Business Administration and Economics. Soon after PSU, he developed an interest in the insurance industry. Unfortunately, his saxophone now sits in his basement, rarely seeing the light of day, overshadowed by a computer and business papers.

Floyd's first job in the insurance industry was as an Allstate agent in Pittsburgh. Five years later, he joined General Reinsurance Corporation as an account representative in Chicago. Despite initially having no understanding of reinsurance, the career move proved to be beneficial. After five years in Chicago, Floyd was transferred to General Re's home office in Connecticut, where he received three promotions, ultimately becoming Second Vice President of Casualty Treaty Underwriting. After seventeen enjoyable years at General Re, family issues necessitated a move back to Pennsylvania in 1986. In Pennsylvania, Floyd began working as a reinsurance broker under the trade name Three Rivers Intermediaries, Ltd., a business he sold in 2019. Floyd met his partner in 2000, and they are currently happily ensconced in Boalsburg, never missing a Penn State football game since (they met at a tailgate).
