Greetings From the Chair

Dear Members,

Our society has always provided valuable educational events, networking events, and fun social events, and this fall is no different.

On Wednesday, September 8, Dr. Ike Ononye gave a fantastic presentation on “A JOURNEY INTO MODERN AFRICAN BEAUTY CARE: PERSPECTIVES FOR SUCCESSFUL INNOVATION”.

Our first in person social event was held at the Main Event in Columbia, MD. A small but dedicated group of society members had a fun filled afternoon with food, fun, and entertainment. We were able to meet new people and test our skills in bowling, laser tag, and arcade games.

In the upcoming month, the chapter will feature several webinars:

On Thursday, October 7, from noon to 1pm, Eunice Cofie-Obeng, the Founder and Chief Cosmetic Chemist of Nuekie will present on the topic “Reimagining Skincare Formulations for Skin of Color”.

On Thursday, October 21, from noon to 1pm, Aaron Feigelman, will discuss “Supercritical Fluid Extraction Technologies: The Past, Present, and Future”

In late November we will be listening to Alison Griffin, from Sudarshan, speak about Color Cosmetics. Look forward to more interesting talks, and one more social event before the end of the year.

Lastly, please check out our new website (<https://midatlanticscc.org/>) that was created by a junior member, Xylia Ajose. Xylia has also created a presence for the Mid-Atlantic Society on Facebook, LinkedIn, Instagram, and Canva. This young lady is loaded with talent and is already a superstar.

Best regards,

Nelson Ayala, Ph.D.
Chair of the Mid-Atlantic Society of Cosmetic Chemists, 2021

Upcoming October Talks

October 21, 2021

Speaker: Aaron Feigelman

Topic: Supercritical Fluid Extraction Technologies:
The Past, Present, and Future

Abstract:

Extraction technologies are fundamental to the cosmetic and food ingredient supply chains. Applied to ingredients ranging from botanical extracts to vegetable oils, modern extraction technologies allow for precise conversion of natural materials into valuable chemicals. Mechanical methods, such as cold-pressing, date back to the early 1800s, while chemical methods, such as solvent and supercritical fluid extraction, came to industry in the early and late 1900s, respectively. In this talk, we'll cover the basics of extraction and dive into the details of supercritical fluid technologies, paying close attention to its recent popularity for use in cannabis, hemp, and upcycled materials.

Bio:

Trained as a mechanical engineer at UCLA, Aaron conducted research at UCLA's Pasarow Mass Spectroscopy Laboratory. His current research focuses on using supercritical fluid technology to transform waste from the coffee industry into valuable products for skincare and food. Having previously worked on engineering systems at Tesla, Aaron is focused on using technology to mitigate climate change and food waste.
