Green sunfish (above) have larger mouths that you can fit your finger in. They usually have blueish speckles around the gill plate. Bluegill (below) have a more rounded snout and much smaller mouths.

Green Sunfish & Their Impact

Green sunfish can be found throughout Innsbrook lakes. Green sunfish are disruptors to the ecosystems of our small lakes because they create an ecological imbalance. These aggressive, adaptable fish have large mouths and will readily eat forage that more desirable species, like bass and bluegill, need to survive and flourish. With less food available, the growth of other species will become stunted, leading to unhealthy fisheries.

The Fishing Club recommends that all green sunfish caught in our lakes be removed.

Do not confuse bluegill with green sunfish. We want to keep bluegill in our lakes!
