

Casually Acquainted
Joan Zen and Jason Hicks
©2001 All Rights Reserved

We were casually acquainted and I never thought to maintain it.
Never knew I'd have to explain about myself and you to anyone.
Much to my satisfaction you felt the same attraction, which caused a chain reaction the likes of which you know I never knew.
But you know I can't complain now that I'm always in such pain now.
How will I keep from going insane?

As I'm drifting through unconsciousness I knew
forever peace eludes me in this eternity.
As I'm sifting through the memories of you they won't leave me be until we meet again.

How could I know I was in danger? After all you were no stranger to me.
Never knew you'd rearrange me, unrecognizable to anyone.
I guess I should have taken action, waited till you were relaxed and then maybe I'd have had a fraction of a second to distract you.
Anyway, maybe I'm the one to blame now. Perhaps I could have changed something somehow. All that I can do is end this pain.

As I'm passing through unconsciousness I knew
forever peace eludes me in this eternity.
As I'm flashing through the memories of you I
I'll never rest till I see you again.

Although it may be wrong I hope when I am gone that you will know just what you did to me when I was so naïve.
But for now I pray that I'll come back another day.
Maybe then I won't be so afraid.

As I'm passing through unconsciousness I knew heaven will exclude me for all eternity.
As I'm going through just what you made me do,
I'll never rest till I see you again.