Children's Eye Health & Safety Month

At this time of year, pediatric clinics push through peak patient volumes of back-to-school well-checks and first-time vision screenings for children. Some kids are squeamish about going to the eye doctor for their yearly testing. Teaching them why it's important and what to expect during optometrist appointments can help them feel more at ease.

Why this is important:

- Clear vision is essential for success in school and everyday activities such as sports and reading
- Vision screenings check for some issues, but only a full eye exam evaluates overall eye health and vision
- Early detection and treatment can prevent long-term issues
- Annual eye exams help children start the school year at their best.

Employee Highlight: Trinity Shelvey.

About Trinity: Trinity has been part of Spectrum Eye Center's patient care team for the past 10 months as a scribe. She enjoys helping patients feel informed and at ease throughout their visit by answering questions whenever she can and offering reassurance every step of the way. For Trinity, creating a welcoming experience starts with making sure each patient feels comfortable and supported.

When she's away from the office, Trinity enjoys relaxing with a coffee from Pine Scones, grabbing dinner at Pizzeria Grazia, or planning her next beach getaway. She's a fan of true crime documentaries, loves anything chocolate hazelnut, and is equally a dog and cat person, though her guinea pigs, Oreo and Snickers, might argue they're the real favorites!
