Vision Impairment Awareness Month

Globally, an estimated 2.2 billion people live with a vision impairment or blindness, and at least 1 billion of those cases could have been prevented or are still unaddressed.

Why this is important:

- Early detection matters. Regular eye exams can catch changes before symptoms become obvious.
- Don't ignore vision changes. Sudden or significant changes should always be evaluated.
- Healthy habits help. UV protection, staying active, and managing overall health can support long-term vision.

Spectrum Eye Center

Meet Dr. Anthony Fioravanti!

We are excited to welcome Dr. Anthony Fioravanti to the Spectrum Eye Center family! Dr. Fioravanti brings 10 years of clinical experience and a passion for providing exceptional, personalized eye care. A graduate of the Southern College of Optometry, he has spent his career caring for patients in North Carolina and most recently served as a partner and optometrist at Insightful Eye Care in Charlotte, NC. His experience includes comprehensive eye care, myopia management, dry eye management, and ocular disease management. Just as importantly, Dr. Fioravanti believes great eye care is about more than what happens during an exam—he places a strong emphasis on listening to his patients, building lasting relationships, and creating a welcoming and comfortable experience. That philosophy makes him a wonderful fit for Spectrum Eye Center and the kind of care we have been proud to provide our community for almost 40 years.

Outside the office, Dr. Fioravanti enjoys golfing, playing the piano, and spending time outdoors with his wife, Brittney—and any wagging tail that wants to join them!

Dr. Fioravanti is now accepting patients. We'd love to make your next appointment with him – just contact our front desk for more information.

Employee Highlight: Sarah Engle

About Sarah: Sarah has been a valued member of Spectrum Eye Center for four years, serving as an Operations Coordinator and Certified Ophthalmic Assistant (COA). She enjoys helping patients feel comfortable by answering questions, addressing concerns, and providing support whenever needed. Her favorite part of working at Spectrum is the opportunity to help patients and make a positive difference in their experience.

Outside of the office, Sarah enjoys spending time with her granddaughter, taking annual cruises, and shopping at TJ Maxx. She's a morning person who loves summer, relaxing at the beach, and enjoying an ice-cold Coca-Cola from McDonald's. When she's unwinding at home, you might find her watching her favorite TV show, FBI.
