

Fellow forum members,

How often have you found you needed to find something and no matter what you seemed to try, you could not get a webpage, Shopsmith or other, to find what you are looking for.

I know this information is known by some folks, and yet no one ever clued others in to the free tools you have available to significantly change your ability to find things, almost any thing

I think we all go to http://www.shopsmith.com/ss\_forum/index.php and type in something in the Search Box and work from those results to seek an answer.

We do this every day, with hundreds of web sites other than Shopsmith, and they all have from time to time failed to find what we were seeking.

Searches inside web pages from their internal Search Boxes are more often limited by historical searches, and even slightly changing the words can result in no results, or results without all the records you would like to have been included, that are relevant.

What if I could use the powerful search capabilities of Google Search, but limit the scope of what it searches from everything else on earth, to just Shopsmith Forum Posts, or Microsoft Tech Support, or just about anywhere else. The answer is that we can.

Searching Shopsmith forums and Searching Shopsmith.com produce different results.

Check out the graphic examples on the pages that follow and I believe you may find a wealth of help finding almost anything

In a recent post, someone was discussing the challenges of finding the part number for a 510 rip fence as an example. I will use that item for my search methods.

I will search first with the Search Box inside Shopsmith.com then the Search Box inside Shopsmith.com / then by using Google.com Search Box.

Next, by using Google.com Search Box but limiting the results searched to ONLY Shopsmith.com website

If you wish to search from something in just the forums, you can search just Shopsmith.com/ss_forum/

Good Luck!

Everett
