

As the neighborhood busybody hides behind bushes, peeking out towards her neighbors, a soccer ball kicked by a group of neighborhood kids strikes her in the back of her head, knocking her through the bushes and into the neighbor's yard.

The neighborhood husband deciding to install a home satellite dish on his roof enlists some of the other neighborhood husbands to help, resulting in an episode full of mishaps, pratfalls and some property destruction.

A simple family barbeque blows out of control, as the barbeque's smokestack, along with flying discs, insight a neighborhood ruckus that involves most of the block.

The Nelson's, the new couple on the block, are trying to adapt to life in the new neighborhood. The neighborhood busybody, a Hyacinth Bucket-style woman, over-bearing, over-friendly, over-spoken and pelted by the neighborhood children at every chance they get. The neighborhood's over-achieving go-getters, a family of four, with one get rich quick scheme after another. Two houses, filled with children, each with a single parent, who seem to have plans to unite the two kingdoms. Rounded out with the neighborhood weirdo, never seen but often heard, shouting and screaming from his window. Take a trip to the neighborhood. Come visit...
