About the Author

Mousey was born in Brooklyn on April 17, 1972, in a Haitian household as Jerry Jean-Baptiste. He was the youngest of six siblings, raised in Queens, New York. A high school graduate with a deep love for poetry and writers such as Langston Hughes, Edgar Allan Poe, Maya Angelou and Nina Simone. He ran the streets for about 3 years, fell in love and then, two tragedies that changed his life forever took place, the devastated breakup with his now former love, immediately followed by an event that almost hijacked his life away, a fatal car accident that left him comatose with brain hemorrhage, and the left side of his body motionless and numb while the right side was all bruised and broken.

At this difficult moment of his life, when he needed love, the power of his faith and family nudged him back to life. He understood that life is worth living. The mixing of these two tragic events gave birth to the author in him, with enough time to read, to think, to observe and feel, to suffer and remember, to change, to relieve the past and relived again. He believes in the power of love again and embarks on the beautiful path of poetry and tales to relieve his own unique feelings, getting the life of freedom and peace of mind he deserves, giving birth to this unique book, his firstborn “Relieved and Reloved”.

Today he embarks on an independent career as a barber that gives him the chance to interact, observe and collect materials for his writing, filled with love, as his diction captivates his peers.

“I’ve grown to love,” the author said, confirming the lesson that his rebirth brings to him, the lesson of love to others and himself. Adoring the future chosen by his pen, as salutations add up, his life begins to coasts.
