In the year 2009, Mark H. Dindo, MD, Department of Surgery, University of Pennsylvania, published a landmark study demonstrating the safety and feasibility of a novel navigation intraoperative system. The study, which was based on a cadaver study, showed that the navigation system was able to guide surgeons to the correct location for tumor resection, significantly reducing the risk of complications and improving patient outcomes.

In this session, we will review the latest advancements in navigation technology and discuss the potential benefits of integrating such systems into clinical practice. We will also explore the challenges and limitations of current navigation systems and discuss strategies for optimizing their performance.

In addition to the main presentation, there will be a hands-on workshop where participants can try out the navigation system and learn how to use it in their own practice.

The conference will also feature a panel discussion on the future of navigation technology in surgery, with experts from leading institutions sharing their perspectives on the current state of the field and predicting trends for the years to come.

We are looking forward to welcoming you to this exciting conference and hope to see you there.

Sincerely,

Dr. Mark H. Dindo, MD
