

How can you help?

The ocean is very important for us. It keeps us healthy and lets us have some of the daily things we need. The ocean provides food, oxygen, transportation for both people and things, and lets us have fun. However, the ocean is being treated badly, and this can impact our health. As you saw what happened to Shelly and Shelldon, pollution and ocean acidification are two big problems in the ocean and can cause harm to ocean animals, such as turtles. Turtles and other life in the ocean mistake floating trash for food, and they eat it. Most animals end up dying.

But, there are ways to stop this from happening! You can start walking or biking short distances to reduce the amount of carbon dioxide in the air. You can start using paper bags and metal water bottles instead of plastic bags and water bottles. You can always recycle and participate in voluntary beach clean-ups. There is so much more that you can do!
