

American Privilege

"I have rights!"

"I have a right to be here!"

"I know my rights."

American Privilege.

These statements by people are usually shouted at law enforcement or some other authority who is trying to keep the peace or enforce a law. They are usually people engaging in some kind of protest of some grievance or perceived injustice. They know their rights but never know their responsibility that goes along with those rights. Blocking a street so others cannot get to work, school or hospital is an infringement on other people's rights. Protesters have a right to protest, but they also have a responsibility not to harass people or stomp on their rights.

With every right there is a corresponding responsibility to respect the rights of others to pursue life, liberty and their pursuit of happiness. The protesters forget or are too ignorant of the Constitution that the right to Assemble also has a requirement and responsibility to do so peacefully. Throwing bottles and bricks at law enforcement is not a peaceful Assembly. Interfering with the duties of law enforcement who are doing their jobs is not peaceful assembly. It is riotous behavior and therefore neutralizes one's rights.

American Privilege is derived from the Constitution. The Constitution is a pact between the government and the people. The people agreed to be governed by laws their representatives put in place for the security and well-being of the citizens. The citizens elected to be governed by Ballots not Bullets. This means the citizens have a responsibility to their neighbors to behave civilly and with respect for their rights.

Our country has always tolerated protests and marches by citizens seeking justice or reform for them, their families and neighbors. The problem is identifying what is a "legitimate" protest versus one led by AWFLs (Angry White Female Liberals). We had the Tea Party protest in the 1700s, the Suffragette Movement in the 1800s, Prohibition 1900s, the Civil Rights in the 1960's and the Vietnam protests in the 1970s. They all led to change in our laws or government.

I can argue that Prohibition was a disaster to the country economically and socially and was repealed. How did we even pass that Constitutional ban on distilling spirits? I blame the 19th Amendment (Suffragette Movement). Men scared of the AWFL of the time buckled. (Yes, I am now looking over my shoulder.)

American Privilege

The protests marches of today are not for the betterment of the country. Many are supporting our enemies or against our moral fabric as a society. The pro-abortion horde is always pushing the envelope of morality. The state of Massachusetts just passed a law to allow abortions up to the day before birth. That is not what President Clinton envisioned in the 1990s when he approved abortion. He said abortion should be safe legal and rare. Yes, a woman has a right to protect her body. She also has a responsibility for the life she is carrying.

Pro-terrorist groups (pro-Hamas, pro-Palestinian) that march on campuses in support of bonafide terrorists are not promoting American values. They have a right to march for their cause. They also have a responsibility not to harm Jewish students on campus. The Israeli students have a right to liberty, freedom and the pursuit of their education.

Being a citizen in the United States of America is a privilege, whether by birth or naturalization. Some of us were lucky that are family forefathers (and foremothers) came to this country for a better life. When they arrived, they assimilated and worked hard and embraced this country's values. They became citizens, fought in our wars, built our cities, roads, railroads and bridges. They wanted to part of America and enjoy American Privilege.

Today the USA has been invaded – yes invaded- by those who want to tear our country apart. Many came here illegally and live off the taxpayer for food, healthcare and education. Amongst the millions who came here in the past decade are hardened criminals who violate the rights of citizens. Yet there are AWFLs whimpering over the rights of illegal alien criminals – who do not have those rights. Even some libtards in Congress are wailing about protecting MS13 gang members.

Then there are Muslims who take allegiance to Islamic Sharia Law over our Constitution. They do not want to be Americans. They do not want to assimilate. They want to create their own caliphate within the borders of the United States. These Muslims want to exert American Privilege to take away our rights and privileges. This religious sect does not accept the responsibility of being in America that they cannot be allowed to infringe our Constitution nor our social ethics and morality. They openly foster sedition which is an illegal act, like speech or writing, that tries to get people to rebel or fight against the government. It encourages public disorder and interferes with the law.

American Privilege comes from our God-given Bill of Rights. Men and women have died and sacrificed to protect our rights and privileges. They did so out of a sense of responsibility. They understood that rights and responsibility go hand in hand to make this country work.
