

Roe vs Wade

Incorrect Terminology

One end of this tug of war has always had a consistent position, the right to life. The opposing position seems to change to fit the need; it's my body, it's my right, it's my choice. Notice the common denominator in the opposition position is the word "MY".

As a great society, we have let the fringe elements drive the bus too many times. Setting the dialog and giving a four-year-old equal time is nonsense. This argument is about consequences not just rights.

No one says, you do not have the right to procreate. You have the right to enjoy the act of procreation. What the pro-lifers are saying is there is a consequence to this action. As a consequence, that can and does create a right. Interesting, how it takes two to create the consequence, a child, yet only one has standing to assert a right? How hollow the claim. How four-year-old is this argument.

One point is undeniable. The consequence of the two people created a third person. Which leaves the single argument; do all persons have equal standing and protection under our constitution. Like a good math problem let's work backwards and start with a 12 second clip of a partial birth abortion. A fully formed baby, partial birthed then killed. In that order. Show me in the Constitution where the rights of the two, can kill the third?

Ah, but viability the four-year-old yells. OK, let's talk about which page of your homework the dog ate. Even a four-year-old cedes that the partial birth is a baby. Why? Cause it looks like a viable human because it is there in front of them.

The four-year-old can see it. Before the birth it's not visible, but it is viable. Let's pretend the mom's womb is made out of Plexiglas where we can see the baby. Yup, now the four-year-old can see the baby right before the partial birth abortion. It's a baby because it looks like a baby. It viable because it is alive. It is a person with rights, says SCOTUS

So fade back in days as we continue looking through the Plexiglas. Look back three months. Baby is fully formed, organs working. Looks the same. What's the difference? Nothing except size. So, the four-year-old just realized the difference between the Plexiglas baby at six month and one just born, is size.

So we fade back several more days as we continue looking through the Plexiglas. We are back another three more months when mom is twelve weeks pregnant. The four-year-old can see the baby is smaller yet, but the organs are not fully formed. The four-year-old just learned a new word and definition; Viability.

In Roe, SCOTUS used the right terminology incorrectly. It used a line in the sand instead of a dynamic juncture of physical events. Science sets the juncture point but nature sets the physical. It is reasonable to assume that in the not to distance future, scientific advancements will change the dynamics of the physical viability juncture even earlier.

So for today. January 2022, the consequences of the two people becomes a third person at twelve weeks, protected and with standing in our laws.
