A Port Dover man is among five people swept up in a two-day operation targeting human trafficking in Woodstock.

Woodstock police launched the initiative Wednesday, leading to charges against five men for communicating with a person for the purpose of obtaining sexual services, police said.

The men are from London, Port Dover, Welland, Woodstock and Tillsonburg and range in age from 28 to 70.

“The investigation is ongoing at this time,” police said in a statement.
