

Rought Thought #3

Bathrooms are not functional – Urinals

Rought Thought #3 Bathrooms are not functional – Urinals. The one bathroom fixture I can't understand as not being a standardized fixture in houses today are urinals. Ladies should be leading the shout for change and insist on them in houses. To those ladies who <GASP> at this, I challenge you to get your black light out.

Urinals are in all public restrooms because it keeps the bathrooms cleaner. The most common comment I have heard from women is they don't want one of these "unsightly things" in their bathroom. It much more practical than a bidet. Therefore, I challenge all women with one or more men/boys in the house, to take a blacklight into a darkened bathroom. If they did, urinals would be required within the week. You will be amazed as to just how large the splash zone is and nobody would ever place a magazine rack or anything else near the toilet again. Anyone needing to sit on toilets will certainly feel a bit unsanitary. Don't blame the male gender for poor aim, or thinking they could just simply sit like the ladies, because bending or folding the male plumbing systems causing other problems. It all comes down to a simple question of physics. You take a water source from a floppy hose, and empty it (freely or under force), 2-3 feet above a bowl of water, and it will splatter. Installation of a urinal will physically separate those which need to sit, and lessens the distance between the floppy hose and the bowl of water to inches, thereby greatly reducing the splash zone. Until the plumbing manufacturers develop a toilet bowl shape which will contain or eliminate splash, things will not change. Its better cleanliness to have the receptacle closer to the hose.

Ladies, did I make my point?

1

Randy Rought
REALTOR®

303-503-6210 / RoughtR2@aol.com

Air Force Retiree still Serving my Community