Coordinating conjunctions are short and simple transitions that are composed of two or three letters. They are used to avoid short, choppy, run-on etc. sentences. They show the way ideas/entire are related to each other. The word FANBOYS is used as a reminder for these conjunctions: For, And, Nor, But, Or, Yet, So. See coordinating conjunctions details Transitions that always appear in pairs and link sentence elements together are called correlative conjunctions. Both...and, neither...nor, either...or, not only...but also... See correlative conjunctions Subordinating conjunctions connect the dependent clause with the independent clause and show the relationship between the two. We use a comma in between if the subordinator (when, before, because, although...) is at the beginning of the sentence. Although it was raining, she went out for a walk. She went out for a walk although it was raining. Because she was tired, she went straight to the bed. She went straight to the bed because she was tired. After she (had) made a phone call, she left home. She left home after she (had) made a phone call.
