EXPERIENCE

Adjunct Professor

The University of Iowa

Iowa City, Iowa 52244

Spring 2024 - Present

In the Department of African American Studies taught the course, African Americans and the Legal System. The goal of this course is to give students a pragmatic understanding of the African American experience in the American legal system. It will facilitate an understanding of the status of African Americans in general, and the plight of the African American urban "underclass" in particular. The course will explore historical events, societal issues, and contemporary racism. Throughout the course, particular focus will be placed on the various segments of the legal system; beginning with the slave trade and slave experience; covering the contradictions between emancipation and Jim Crow; African American protests such as the Civil Rights movement and Black Lives Matter, the success and failure of policing, the court system, and incarceration; finally, solutions to improve equity within the American legal system.

Adjunct Professor

The University of Iowa

Iowa City, Iowa 52244

Semesters: Fall 2022, Spring 2023, Fall 2023

In the Department of African American Studies taught Black Culture and Experience; Contemporary Issues.

Description: This course explores Black culture and experience within a contemporary perspective. Readings, interactive experiences, online discussion, course assignments (interview, projects, essays and final paper), and unit quizzes will offer students the opportunity to better understand Black culture in the 21st century. The course will explore a variety of important societal topics such as: education, religion, literature, media, politics, sports, criminal justice, health, and economics.

August 2007 – December 2007

During the Fall 2007 semester returned to teaching a previously designed course titled "African-Americans and the Criminal Justice System." As described below, this was a course designed to examine and explore the historical underpinnings of the relationship between race and criminal justice throughout American history. Through placement of this topic within its historical context the goal was to present and examine patterns of discrimination that could be more easily understood as constituting a continuing pattern of American jurisprudence and not merely an anomaly within the system.

Graduate Research Assistant:

University of Iowa
Division of Sponsored Programs
Iowa City, IA 52242

October 2003 – August 2005

Duties at DSP required assisting graduate and professional students at the U of I in locating external funding for education, research and special projects. This position requires knowledge of grant writing protocols, utilization of funding databases and search techniques in the acquisition and locating of funding sources.

Graduate Instructor:

University of Iowa
Department of History
Department of Rhetoric
Iowa City, IA 52242

August 1999 – May 2003

Taught the general education core course Rhetoric for school years Fall 1999 through Spring 2002. This included the two-part, two semester course(s), 10:001 and 10:002 as well as advanced Rhetoric 10:003. This course emphasizes the acquisition of skills for the critical analysis of reading material and development of effective writing skills. Use of the written word in addition to verbal and non-verbal skills were explored to help students develop a full range of linguistic knowledge.

Following my period teaching in the Department of Rhetoric I returned to the Department of History to develop and teach a History 'Issues' course for the Fall 2002 semester. This course, titled "African-Americans and the Criminal Justice System," was a course designed to examine and explore the historical underpinnings of the relationship between race and criminal justice throughout American history. Through placement of this topic within its historical context the goal was to present and examine patterns of discrimination that could be more easily understood as constituting a continuing pattern of American jurisprudence and not merely an anomaly within the system.

Spring 2003 saw the teaching of Western Civilization III, which covered the period immediately prior to the French Revolution to the present. This teaching assignment required the leading of discussion in three sections (approximately 66 students) in a course requiring a professor-lead lecture.

December 1991 - October 1994

This position necessitated supervision of clientele, who, as determined by an area supervisor, required a more restrictive form of probation. This increased supervision required considerably more contact with clientele by the supervising agent and in some select cases, utilization of electronic monitoring devices to insure curfew compliance. Use of this electronic monitoring equipment required technical expertise in setup, maintenance and troubleshooting of equipment.

In addition, all other duties of traditional probation supervision were included, such as case management and all of its attendant responsibilities.

One of three designated Intelligence Officers/Gang Monitors of the Department's Intelligence Resource Unit. The purpose of this unit is to facilitate the gathering and dissemination of relevant information to agents within the Department as well as work with designated law enforcement agencies to further enhance our information gathering capabilities and intra-departmental cooperation. As one of the Department's Intelligence officers, I was certified by the State's Department of Public Safety by virtue of completion of an Intelligence course facilitated by the Iowa Division of Criminal Investigation, an agency analogous to the FBI, only at the state level. As a successful graduate of this course, I am a member of the Iowa Law Enforcement Intelligence Network (LEIN), an organization of Iowa Law Enforcement professionals. In addition, I am a member of the Midwest Gang Investigators Association and as such, have attended numerous training seminars and conferences, the focus of which have been examination of the existence and proliferation of gangs in our society with the purpose of instituting counter-measures to neutralize gang threat.

Probation/Parole Officer I and II

Sixth Judicial District
Department of Correctional Services
1035 3rd Avenue, SE
Cedar Rapids, Iowa

November 1989 - December 1991

Under immediate supervision of an Area Supervisor, requirements included supervision of individuals placed on probation to the Department. Duties entailed development of case plans, verification of employment, completion of program goals that included but were not limited to substance abuse treatment/counseling or other relevant programming in order to full integrate the individual into the community as a law-abiding, productive citizen.

Residential Advisor

Sixth Judicial District
Department of Correctional Services
Community Corrections Center
Cedar Rapids, Iowa

January 1988 to November 1989

The Community Corrections Center was a pre-institutional residential, correctional facility. In this position, I was required to monitor client activities, supervise clients and visitors, control contraband and detect the use of drugs/alcohol by clients. I provided counseling as needed, worked closely with client counselors, area substance abuse agencies and other community services relevant to the particular needs of Department clientele. Generally enforced all Department and Center rules and regulations.
