

Choosing to have your refund electronically transferred has many benefits over receiving your money as a check in the mail.

- One of the clearest advantages of direct deposit is that you can receive your money faster than you would if you were to wait for your check to arrive in the mail.
- Another benefit is that choosing a tax refund direct deposit allows you to receive your money safely and securely. With concerns of identity theft and fraud on the rise, IRS direct deposit means you don't have to worry about mail theft, which could put your check and your personal information at risk.

You'll need to provide your bank or financial institution's routing number and your account number. These numbers can be found at the bottom of your check or deposit slip. The routing number is the first series of numbers listed and is nine-digits in length. The next set of numbers is your account number.

Keep in mind that you will not be able to change this information once you've submitted your tax return. That said, you should double check the routing and account number to avoid any errors. Additionally, it's important to know that you can only have your tax refund deposited into an account in your name — direct deposit into someone else's account is not allowed.
