ABOUT

Rachel Anoni specializes in hospitality and commercial interiors with a select portfolio of high-end residential projects. Every project begins with a single question: what does the client actually need? Before selecting a single material or sketching a floor plan, she listens. She evaluates how people use a space, identifies what isn't performing, and builds a design strategy around solving it.

She creates spaces that embody quiet luxury through balance, craftsmanship, and restraint. Each design is guided by a dedication to timeless elegance, thoughtful detail, and refined compsition, but it's always grounded in solving real problems for real people.

HI HOSTEL NYC

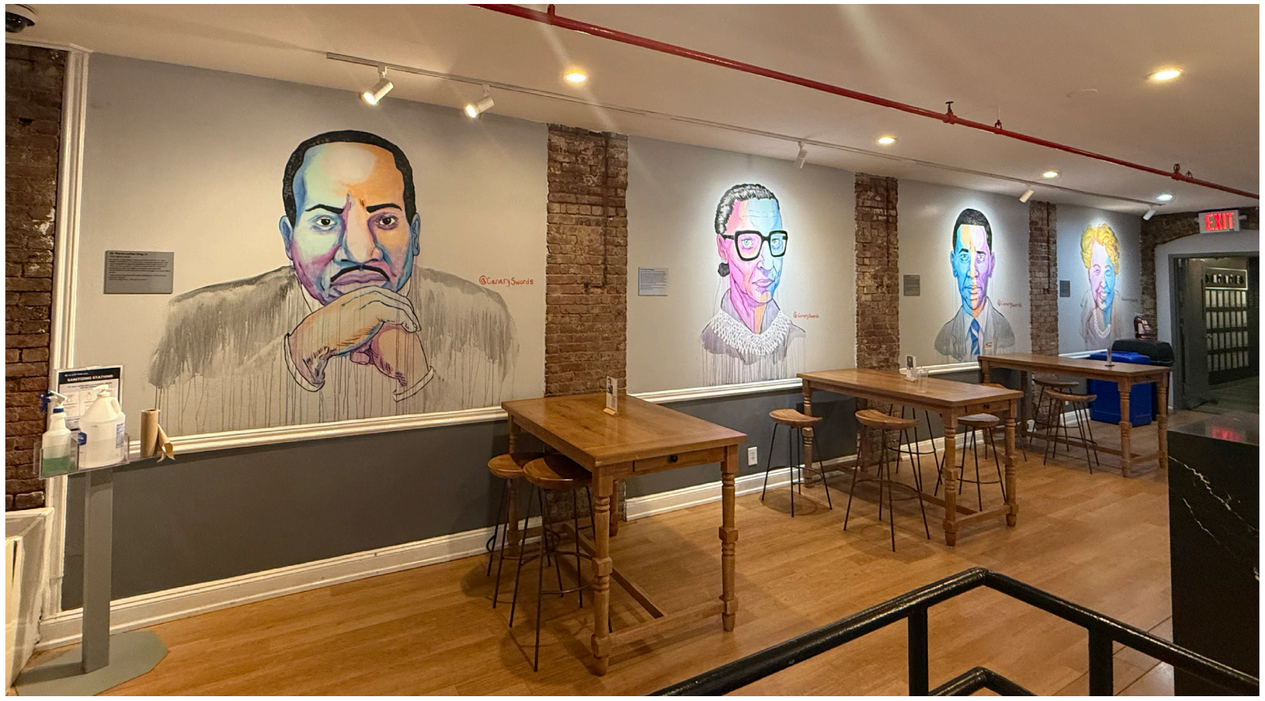

Bar Lounge

New York, NY | Hospitality | 1000 sqft

CONCEPT + SITE

The client needed to turn an underused communal room into a bar lounge that would give guests a reason to stay in for the evening. The existing space felt institutional. Large murals, fluorescent lighting, and mismatched furniture offered nothing that made new arrivals want to linger or connect.

The challenge was creating a warm, social atmosphere on a limited budget without major structural changes. The building is a designated historical landmark, so the concept centered on a modern reinterpretation of its original character. The design needed to honor that history while supporting casual gatherings, small events, and everyday use, making the space feel like a destination rather than an afterthought.

SHAKER HEIGHTS

PRIVATE RESIDENCE

Shaker Hts, OH | Luxury Residential | 5000 sqft

CONCEPT + SITE

Full interior and exterior renovation of a mid-century family home in Shaker Heights. Completed in collaboration with KAS Interiors. The client wanted to modernize while retaining select existing and family furnishings. The challenge was balancing original architectural character with updated materials, spatial flow, and a refined atmosphere that felt both fresh and familiar.

Rachel led the interior material selections and spatial planning for every room, specifying custom millwork for the great room cabinet and built in wine storage. A subtle arch motif was carried throughout the home, tying new elements back to the original architecture. She coordinated finishes across the kitchen, laundry, and bathrooms to create a cohesive palette

CUSTOM DETAILS

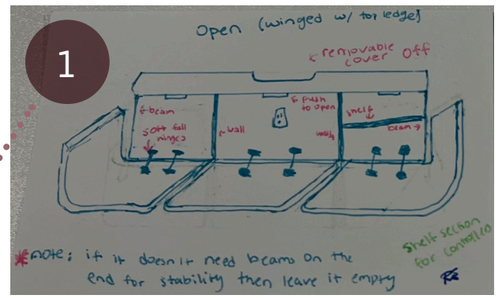

1. The client's husband needed a place to store gaming consoles, controllers, and cables that wouldn't turn the great room into a tech graveyard. This wall-mounted white oak cabinet uses a winged door system that folds open to reveal organized compartments with built-in cable management.

2. The clients needed accessible bedroom storage that wouldn't feel clinical or out of place in a warm contemporary interior. This walnut cabinet features a serpentine face with gently curving vertical channels that create visual depth while keeping the profile approachable.

Evergreen

Senior Living Community

New York, NY | Senior Living | 1100 sqft

CONCEPT

Most senior living spaces are designed around limitations. Evergreen was designed around the way its residents actually want to live. The clients are seniors aged 65 to 80+ who chose co-living out of a desire for connection, shared experience, and independence. They are curious, socially active, and unwilling to disappear quietly into old age.

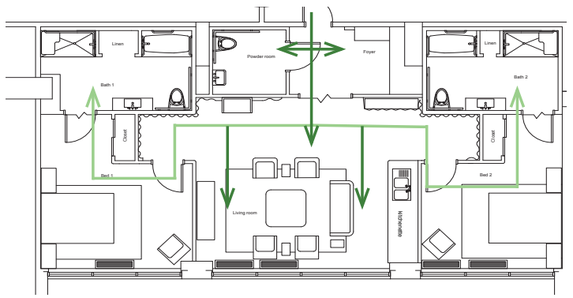

Rooted in biophilic principles and the form of the ginkgo leaf, the design quietly bridges nature and technology. Rounded rectangular forms found throughout the plan, furniture, and ceiling layout echo the devices residents carry daily, while the foyer lighting cove subtly references a familiar camera cluster. Supportive features are woven into the architecture, from wayfinding handrails that double as lit design elements to cork and linoleum flooring selected for slip resistance and joint relief.
