HOW TO INTERPRET

ANTIQUUE CAR ADS

IF IT SAYS:

IT REALLY MEANS:

Rare model.....	Nobody liked them when new either
Older restoration.....	Can't tell it's been restored
Needs engine work.....	It's been frozen for 30 years
Uses no oil.....	Just throws it out
No rust.....	Body and fenders missing
Rough.....	It's too bad to lie about
One owner.....	Never been able to sell
No time to complete.....	Can't find parts anywhere
Needs interior.....	Seats are gone
Rebuilt engine.....	Has new spark plugs
May run.....	But it never has
Low mileage.....	Third time around
Many new parts.....	Keeps breaking down
29 coats hand-rubbed paint....	Needed that much to cover rust
Clean.....	It sat out in the rain yesterday
Best offer.....	About what I expect to get
Always driven slowly.....	Won't go any faster
Prize winner.....	Hard luck trophy 3 times in a row
Stored 25 years.....	Under a tree
Real show stopper.....	Orange with purple fenders
Easy restoration.....	Parts will come off in your hand
Ready to show.....	Just washed it
Top good.....	Only leaks when it rains

The Sale of Harrah's Automobile Collection

EXCERPTS ONLY. SEE LINKS BELOW TO READ THE ENTIRE ARTICLE (in three parts).

Casino magnate William Harrah with just a few of his cars. He died with no provisions in his will for the future of the collection.

For serious collectors of vintage cars, the calendar is filled with top-flight auctions, many of which could vie for the title of most important. Monterey. Scottsdale. Rétromobile.

In a sense, however, they all flow from a series of sales that took place in the mid-1980s. Those auctions liquidated the holdings of the Harrah's Automobile Collection, considered by many to be the most significant amassment of vintage cars ever assembled.

Three blockbuster events—all done rapid-fire style and with every car selling at no reserve—played to a packed house of the era's top collectors and those who aspired to join them. To this day, those events stand as the greatest going-out-of-business sale the classic car world has ever seen.

Yet the circumstances around the sales—why they had to happen in the first place, how they were organized, and what their true impact was—have never been widely understood.

Part I: Who was William Harrah?

The Harrah's Automobile Collection reflected the passion, and the fortune, of one man: William Fisk Harrah. Born in South Pasadena, California, in 1911, Bill Harrah had to drop out of UCLA during the Depression, worked briefly in his family's small-time entertainment businesses, then took over his Dad's pool hall and bingo parlor in the 1930s. In just three years, he had parlayed a $100 per week "Tango Bingo" game into a $25,000 annual business.

Seeking broader success, Harrah bought his way into the semi-cloistered Reno gambling fraternity. Over time, always raising standards and hiring the best people he could find, his hotels and casinos expanded exponentially in Reno and Lake Tahoe. A reformed gambler himself, he worked to overcome the gaming industry's sleazy reputation by creating the Nevada Gaming Control Board in 1955.

Always focusing on customer service, renowned as a benevolent employer, and described as "an impeccable host," Harrah raised industry standards, attracted and befriended headline entertainers, like Frank Sinatra, Bill Cosby, Sammy Davis, Jr., the Smothers Brothers, and a young Jay Leno, while expanding his operations to Las Vegas. William Harrah with Sammy Davis Jr. (and wife Altovise) in 1973.

Harrah's many other businesses included auto sales—he was a Ferrari dealer, and he became the Ferrari distributor for the Western United States. He owned a Jeep dealership, as well as other auto franchises. To help publicize his enterprises, Bill Harrah sponsored Unlimited Hydroplane racing. His speedy "Tahoe Miss" won five races and was the American Power Boat Association (APBA) Gold Cup winner in 1966, on the way to a National Championship.

Considered an entrepreneur and a canny businessman, always a sharp dresser, outwardly shy, but insidiously clever with innovative promotions and bold new business practices, Harrah overcame a drinking problem, and was married seven times to six different women. His shortest marriage (four months) was to singer-songwriter, Bobbie Gentry, whose haunting ballad, "Fancy," describes a star-crossed relationship between an older man and a poor Southern prostitute.

Although his personal life, for a time, was erratic, the steady success of Harrah's glitzy hotels and casinos helped finance an immense automobile collection which reached nearly 1500 vehicles, including some of the rarest and most valuable cars of all time.

Part II: The auctions

Holiday Inns had purchased the Harrah's casino empire and, along with it, had come into possession of the late William Harrah's 1000+ vintage cars. Despite attempts on the part of the state of Nevada and others to save the entire collection, the Holiday Inn board decided to sell the cars at no-reserve auctions (excepting 175 cars and two antique planes that it donated to create the National Automobile Museum, in Reno).

Fearing that supply might exceed demand, Holiday Inn split the collection into three sales over three years: September 1984; September 1985; and June 1986. The auctions were held right on the premises of the collection, with well-known auctioneers Don Britt, and Dean and Daniel Kruse running the sales.

Part III: The legacy of the Harrah's auctions

The last public auction of the Harrah's automobile collection took place in June 1986. In the period that followed, the collector car market grew tremendously. Auctions invaded Pebble Beach. Values for vintage Ferraris and muscle cars boomed and went bust (then, eventually, boomed again). A small Northern Michigan company that provided insurance for wooden boats expanded to cover classic cars.

Today, the buying and selling of collector cars is a vast global industry. How much did the dispersal of this one magnificent collection have to do with creating that? And how have the Harrah's cars themselves fared in successive sales?
