May 30, 1931 – 90 Years Ago – First Across the Dam

In 1912, Ralph Wood Street (1882-1953), a lawyer from Kansas City, had the first idea to build a hydroelectric dam on the Osage River. He was possibly inspired by a project during that same time period on the White River in southern Missouri which created Lake Taneycomo (Taney County Missouri) in 1913. In 1924, Street partnered with Walter Price Cravens (1882-1968), president of the Kansas City Joint Stock Land Bank to fund the project, to bring hydroelectric power to Kansas City.

Cravens was charged, along with others, with misappropriations of funds in 1927. In 1928 he was convicted on eighty-eight counts of federal violations. His legal appeals went all the way to the United States Supreme Court along with a clemency appeal to President Roosevelt. He lost and in 1933 began a six year sentence at the federal prison in Leavenworth, Kansas. Street took a job with Union Electric of Saint Louis, which completed the project to provide electricity to the Saint Louis area.

Construction of the dam started on August 6, 1929 with an average workforce at anytime of 4,600 and an average pay of 35 cents per hour. Over 20,000 workers constructed the dam, working twenty-four hours a day. The twenty foot wide highway slab across the top of the dam was completed on January 31, 1931. The lake began filling on February 2, 1931. At the time it was the largest man-made lake in the United States with a surface area of 58,500 acres and 1,150 miles of shoreline.

Early to Rise

The official opening for traffic across the dam was set for 6:00 a.m. Saturday May 30, 1931 (Memorial Day). Oma Frances DeGraffenreid (1902-1990), her sister Noma Ann DeGraffenreid (1904-1989) and their

Oma Frances DeGraffenreid

Elta (Harper) DeGraffenreid (R)

sister-in-law Elta (Harper) DeGraffenreid (1899-1989) left the George Riley DeGraffenreid (1876-1939) home near the village of Bagnell at 4:00 a.m. George was the father of Noma and Oma. Because it was raining and due to the poor dirt road conditions, the five mile trip took an hour and they arrived at the west side of the dam, in their 1928 Chevrolet Coach, at 5:00 a.m. They waited in the pouring down rain until the road barrier was taken down and when the whistle blew at 6:00 a.m., they went speeding off. While crossing the 2,543 foot long dam they met four cars, which had started from the east end barrier area. The girls sped away and as they crossed the east end, they looked back and saw the other cars had not yet driven past the west end, making them the first car to cross the dam after it officially opened to traffic.

Politically Correct Winner

There was a controversy as to who crossed first. The Eldon Advertiser newspaper stated that Mrs. J. T. Ritter, wife of the Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation hospital superintendent, crossed it first in a new Auburn-Eight. Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation oversaw the construction of the dam. Mrs. Ritter was given the right-of-way to cross first because she “had a good many friends at the dam”.

Instant Sightseeing Destination

It was reported that 1,771 vehicles crossed the dam that first Saturday and 2,914 on Sunday. Many others parked and watched on both sides to first check the dam’s strength. The society sections of newspapers would report the names of people who took a day trip, or longer, to view and cross the dam, from as far away as surrounding states, as it was the largest body of water to see without having to travel to a coast.

The First Drowning

Just over a week later the first drowning at the lake occurred. On Sunday June 7, 1931, George William Haskell (born 1876) drown, as some newspapers reported, while bathing in the lake. Haskell was a steam-fitter or pipe-fitter and superintendent of the pipe division for the Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation, based near Boston, Massachusetts. He had worked at the dam site since the beginning of construction in 1929. Other newspapers and his death certificate tell a different story as his certificate states: "Drowned at Lake Ozark Forest Campground in 40 feet of water trying to swim the lake, as a feat of expert. Certainly shock to heart after a hearty breakfast and cold water. Congestion of stomach and heart blocked created from shock." His body was recovered with drag lines near the campground area located about fourteen miles below Warsaw. He had bragged he could swim from one side of the lake to the other. His body was taken to the Gillespie Funeral Home in Sedalia and was then shipped by Union Pacific Railroad to his home in Lutherville, Maryland. He was buried in Towson, Maryland near Baltimore.

Elta-Oma-Noma

The DeGraffenreids were descendants of Baron Christopher DeGraffenreid of Bern, Switzerland who founded New Bern, North Carolina (birthplace of Pepsi-Cola) in 1710. Their branch of the family moved to Miller County in the mid 1800's. Oma and Noma lived their lives in the local lake area. Elta's husband, Lloyd DeGraffenreid passed away in 1934. She remarried and passed away in Johnson County, Kansas but all three women are buried in the Conway Cemetery, Osage Beach. George Riley DeGraffenreid, father of Oma and Noma, was the original owner and builder of the famous White House in Lake Ozark, a hotel, café and dance venue. He was a road construction foreman during the building of the dam. The women's nephew, Tennyson DeGraffenreid worked thirty-three years for Union Electric and was operating foreman at the electric plant. In the past, the Oma Noma Heritage Festival has been celebrated at Lake Ozark including such things as a parade, outhouse race and old car caravan across the dam.

Garage believed to be firebombed

A garage belonging to Albert Edwards in Russellville was completely destroyed early this morning by what law enforcement officers believe to have been a fire bomb.

The garage, five cars and one wrecker in the building were completely destroyed in the fire. A conservative estimate places damages at $30,000.

Floyd Vaughn, who lives close to the garage, heard a crash near the garage around 2 a. m. and saw a car leave the area. It is believed the car was headed west on Route C.

Five departments from Russellville, California, Centertown and rural Jefferson City assisted in putting out the blaze.

Russellville City Marshal Charles Platter and Jesse Crocker, Cole County deputy, investigated the accident during the early morning hours.

The stories behind car brand names - David Airey

- Alfa Romeo – the company was originally known as ALFA, an acronym for Anonima Lombarda Fabbrica Automobili. When Nicola Romeo bought ALFA in 1915, his surname was appended.
- Aston Martin – from the "Aston Hill" races (near Aston Clinton) where the company was founded, and the surname of Lionel Martin, the company's founder. Audi – Latin translation of the German name "Horch". The founder August Horch left the company after five years, but still wanted to manufacture cars. Since the original "Horch" company was still there, he called his new company Audi, the Latin form of his last name. In English it is "hark."
- BMW – Bayerische Motoren Werke (Bavarian Motor Works).
- Cadillac – named after the 18th century French explorer Antoine Laumet de La Mothe, sieur de Cadillac, founder of Detroit, Michigan. Cadillac is a small town in the South of France. The company, founded in 1902, was purchased by General Motors in 1909 and survives to this day as a GM brand.
- Chevrolet – named after company co-founder Louis Chevrolet, a Swiss-born auto racer. The company was merged into General Motors in 1917 and survives only as a brand name.
- Chrysler – named after the company founder, Walter P. Chrysler.
- Citroën – named after André-Gustave Citroën (1878–1935), a French entrepreneur of Dutch descent. He was the fifth and last child of the Dutch Jewish diamond merchant Levie Citroën and Mazra Kleinmann (of Warsaw, Poland).
- Daewoo – company founder Kim Woo Chong called it Daewoo which means "great house" or "great universe" in Korean.
- Datsun – first called DAT, from the initials of its financiers Den, Aoyama, and Takeuchi. Soon changed to DATSON to imply a smaller version of their original car, then (as SON can mean "loss" in Japanese) again to DATSUN when they were acquired by Nissan.
- Ferrari – from the name of its founder, Enzo Ferrari.
- Fiat – acronym of Fabbrica Italiana Automobili Torino (Italian Automobile Factory of Turin).
- Ford Motor Company – named after its founder, Henry Ford, who introduced automobile mass production in 1914.
- Honda – from the name of its founder, Soichiro Honda.
- Hyundai – connotes the sense of "the present age" or "modernity" in Korean.
- Mercedes – from the first name of the daughter of Emil Jellinek, who distributed cars of the early Daimler company around 1900.
- Nissan – the company was earlier known by the name Nippon Sangyo which means "Japan Industries."
- Porsche – car company named after founder Ferdinand Porsche, an Austrian automotive engineer. The family name may have originated in the Czech name "Boreš" (boresh).

- Renault – named after the founder Louis Renault.
- Rolls-Royce – name used by Rolls-Royce plc and Rolls-Royce Motor Cars, among others. In 1884 Frederick Henry Royce started an electrical and mechanical business, making his first car, a Royce, in 1904. He was introduced to Charles Stewart Rolls on 4 May that year. The pair entered into a partnership in which Royce would manufacture cars to be sold exclusively by Rolls, and the cars would be called Rolls-Royce.
- Saab – founded in 1937 in Sweden as Svenska Aeroplan aktiebolaget (Swedish Aeroplane Company); the last word is typically abbreviated as AB, hence Saab and Saab Automobile AB.
- Subaru – from the Japanese name for the constellation known to Westerners as Pleiades or the Seven Sisters. Subaru's parent company, Fuji Heavy Industries, was formed from a merger of six companies, and the constellation is featured on the company's logo.
- Toyota – from the name of the founder, Sakichi Toyoda. Initially called Toyoda, it was changed after a contest for a better-sounding name. The new name was written in katakana with eight strokes, a number that is considered lucky in Japan.
- Volkswagen – from the German for people's car. Ferdinand Porsche wanted to produce a car that was affordable for the masses – the Kraft-durch-Freude-Wagen (or "Strength-Through-Joy car," from a Nazi social organization) later became known, in English, as the Beetle.
- Volvo – which means "I roll" in Latin, from the infinitive form "volvere." It was originally a name for a ball bearing being developed by SKF.

AN EPIC EVENT!

During the recent Shelby-Fest in Jefferson City, MMOCC Members Dennis and Laura Even led a caravan of 70 Mustangs through the beautiful sites of Cole and Osage Counties visiting Taos, Wardsville, Osage Bend, St. Thomas, Meta, Freeburg, Westphalia, and more. Dennis and Laura not only led the parade, but started their own ruckus when their Mustang broke down on the way to Shelby-Fest only to be assisted by friends with tools, a Missouri State Trooper that located the needed part, and a Cole County Deputy to warn traffic about their “repair in progress”. Dennis Even tells it better... so make him tell you the story!
