Comfort to prevent a meltdown

A Macy's Autism Pals Service Dog can help a child with autism in so many ways:

Increase Safety: Many children with autism have no concept of danger and run away. Our dogs can be tethered to your child and trained to take commands from you.

Increase Socialization: Having the safety and stability of a service dog can allow you as a family to get out of the house and participate in new experiences on a more regular basis.

Provide Stability: Children with autism often have a difficult time transitioning to new environments and may experience sensory overload.

Reduce Outbursts: Our Autism Service dogs help disrupt behaviors by making contact with your child by touch or by laying on their lap.

Our Journey
Several years ago my husband and I adopted two boys with autism. As our two boys began to settle into our family we started to realize what our family had committed to. The melt downs, odd behaviors, repetitiveness and not being able to take them anywhere was overwhelming. We did not know how to help our two boys cope and interact with their world around them.

We did a ton of research on therapies and we found the ones that would benefit our sons. As therapy began to help them cope with life we still noticed something missing — they were still lacking more emotional stability, sensory input and independence that was different from what they were already receiving from us and therapy.

As we began our research on how a service dog could help our boys, we noticed that the waiting lists are incredibly long....and with our boys needing something sooner, six years was way too long to wait. Thus began our journey to training service dogs for kids with autism.

We do business in Georgia, Florida and South Carolina

“Our boys an now explore their world with more stability and less meltdowns.”
