Long Live the Kings - Protecting Fish at the Hood Canal Bridge

How can we protect fish at the Hood Canal Bridge? Long Live the Kings, in partnership with the Hood Canal Coordinating Council, Tribes, and state and federal agencies, is working to address high fish mortality at this floating bridge.

The Human Side of Plastic: Abby Barrows

On Deer Isle, Maine, home to one of the world’s most productive lobster ports, warming waters and invisible microplastic pollution threaten a centuries-old way of life. As veteran lobsterman Joel Billings and his daughter Hannah reckon with the possible end of their family’s tradition, neighbor and microplastics researcher Abby Barrows offers a vision for a more sustainable future through plastic-free aquaculture.

A Little Story About Forever

This short film about forever unfolds from the POVs of father (max) and son (kip) as they attempt to write a book about what forever means. The father feels overwhelmed by all of the threats to forever, like forever chemicals, and calls an unlikely hero – Mark Ruffalo – to ask for help seeing the big picture.

7:00 - Intermission

7:10 - Act Two

Wild Hope: Thunder and Fire

60 million American bison, commonly known as buffalo, once thundered across the prairies of North America – until 1889, when they were almost driven to extinction. Now, tribes and conservationists join forces to bring the species back from the brink, finally returning the American bison to their native grasslands.

Wild Hope: Building for Birds

Millions of birds pass through our yards during their bi-annual migrations, but they face an invisible killer along the way: glass windows. In the US alone, an estimated one billion birds die each year when they collide with windows. Now, two organizations help pave the way to a bird-friendly future.
