EDITOR'S NOTE:

You may think that the "section" meeting is for really dedicated involved and active 99s. That's true, but it's also for 99s who want to have a weekend away, and spend a good amount of it talking about aviation, enjoying the company of other aviators, enjoying tours of a new area of the country, comparing notes with fellow student pilots, or airline pilots, or any aviation pursuit there is. It's a fun girls weekend.

FLYING and FRIENDS

JILL FELDMAN, CHAIRMAN

Dear Chicago Area 99s,

This month's Chairman letter is all about Publicity for the 2019 International Conference in Dayton this July. I've started sending out the letter below to potential sponsors and advertisers, but now I need help to reach out to more. I would like to get some assistance by reaching out to the additional companies with the letter below. If you know a company that would welcome advertising to our organization, please contact me first to make sure we haven't already reached out. Then I'll give you the ok to be the one to send out the letter. Minimally, we will need a contact name and phone number for each potential sponsor. Itasca Safety Seminar Exhibitors have been contacted, but any ones we get for the International conference will be additional ones we can contact for next year's Safety Seminar – so as a chapter we get additional benefits.

Once the original contact has been made, I also need help with follow-up emails. If you are available to send out about 10 follow up emails a week for a couple of weeks in March, please let me know.

Thank-you for any help you can give me.

Jill Feldman,

Chicago Area Chapter Chair

OUR STUDENT PILOT PROGRESS REPORTS (don't forget to send your student training reports each month by the 20th)

Jill Feldman Jill reports no flight time due to weather, but one hour of ground school and quite a few more working on the Stinson 108 for its annual.

Colleen Murphy Says she is still spending time in the pattern, and that she took (and passed) her written solo aeronautical knowledge test.

Eva Kozlowski Eva is also weather stumped, but she is studying and working on other pertinent paperwork.

Kseniya Polinsky Is almost done. Signed off for check ride, and completing the oral part with 99 DPE Gail LaPook, has put her sooo close. Only the flight portion left to do. Good luck Kseniya—you got this girl!

Kari Buckvold Kari has been trying to find a good CFI to start working with. The one she has been trying to reach has been too busy to meet with her (that would be me—your editor—shame on me) Kari try again please! Ill buy coffee!

Katie Christensen Katie is so excited. She started flying at Poplar Grove and has reported three flight lessons and progress.

Erika Stutz Erika has applied for 99s membership after meeting our Shona Williams on a recent AA flight. Her app is on hold until she gets a student certificate. Erika plans to move from the FA back of the plane to the FO front of the plane and is looking into American's Cadet Program. Good luck Erika. Keep us posted Got this article from one of our students Enjoy!!!!

Learning to Fly in the Winter

by Colleen Murphy

When people told me that taking lessons in the winter would be a challenge, I expected that to mean lessons would be cancelled more frequently due to weather. Fortunately, most weren't cancelled and important lessons were learned.

The cold temperatures mean not rushing the pre-flight checklist. It means learning that power settings previously memorized don't apply in the dense air. Pattern work on a cold day (13°F) with no wind sometimes means putting the plane in idle much sooner than normal. Sometimes on the base leg. Lesson 1 – Learning the performance characteristics of your airplane when the weather changes.

Snow on the runway – where did the centerline go? Snow banks surrounding the runway – watch those wingtips. Visibility 4-5 miles, overcast at 2500. Good day for pattern work. The sky is white, the ground is white – what happened to the horizon? Lesson 2 – “Seeing” for yourself how spatial disorientation could occur.

Strong winds can occur in any season. Practice in a 30kt left crosswind and seeing for yourself what full-right rudder means in your airplane – awesome beyond belief. A bad-ass moment. This lesson also came with turbulence, banging my head at least twice on the canopy and a string of f-bombs. Turbulence is my nemesis, raising my stress levels.

Lesson 3 – A sobering lesson on the impact of stress. We went from Morris C09 to Cushing 0C8 to practice XW take offs and landing. After 5 laps in the pattern my CFI decided we did enough and its time to go home. This is the most stressed I have been in a long time. All I could think about is getting back to C09. Navigating and planning are weak points for me and I had a case of tunnel vision. Twice he asked me where would I land if I had engine failure, both times my response was too slow. He reached over, put the plane in idle and announced my engine failed. My stress level was so high that all I could think about was flying back to C09. I completely forgot my training. Even as he coached me, my mind did not engage in the procedure. I just reacted to what he told me. The best spot to land was directly behind me at 0C8. Looking at the runway all I could think was how did I get here and I'm too high. As soon as he said forward slip- my mind decided to join us. The trip home was uneventful. Lesson 3 - Being stressed interfered with my memory, ability to think clearly, judgement and response time.
