Eliberto Mendoza: Loachamin has shown commitment to residents

In my over 10 years in Boulder County and Longmont, one of the attributes I love most about this community is its commitment to opportunity. Having grown up in a part of the country where poverty is rampant and economic mobility is scarce, our community continues to demonstrate that even a migrant farmer kid can make something of himself and provide a good life for his family. I believe that it's the responsibility of any elected leader to ensure that everyone in the community is given an opportunity to succeed.

Whether working as an educator in the St. Vrain Valley or working with Longmont's Resiliency for All program, Marta Loachamin has shown her commitment to providing opportunity for every resident in our community. As a successful business woman Marta, a housing expert, has helped many families achieve the American dream of owning a home. Serving as a mentor for Latinx entrepreneurs she is helping facilitate the next generation of leaders. For over 20 years Marta has worked diligently to bridge the equity gaps of sustainable housing, education, resiliency and economic opportunity throughout Boulder County.

In 2020, Boulder County voters will have the chance to chart a new direction. Together we can choose to elect a person who has given her life to make this community a place where her two boys and every child has an opportunity to succeed. Marta is not just a qualified candidate — a CU graduate, a Colorado certified teacher, a successful business woman, and a great mom — she is the best candidate. Join me in charting this new journey.
