

“As an old school law professor, I so enjoyed your commentary [on flaunt and flout]. Brava!!”

—Denis F. McLaughlin, Professor of Law and William E. Garland Fellow, Seton Hall University School of Law, Newark, NJ

“It's refreshing to see a piece, written by a purist, without misspellings, improper use of punctuation and vocabulary, all of which I loathe. ... I'm proud to be a member of the team of contributing authors having you as our captain.”

—Louis Locascio, J.S.C. (ret.), Of Counsel to Gold, Albanese, Barletti & Locascio, Red Bank, NJ

“I find your columns very entertaining. I love your command of the language and your sense of humor. I won't even try to add a quip!”

—Marie E. Lihotz, P.J.A.D. (ret.), Of Counsel to Archer & Greiner, Voorhees, NJ

“I just read your two recent ‘In re Words’ articles, and I felt compelled to send a quick note of thanks. Your articles were spot on in so many ways, they were a joy to read. Thank you and I hope to read more of your writing in the future.”

—Richard K. Brancale, Lead Counsel, Practising Law Institute, New York, NY

“This is just a quick email to salute you for your column You had me nodding my head in vigorous agreement!”

—Tom Hershenson, Marketing Manager, Elevate, Washington, D.C.

“I wanted to reach out to let you know that I thoroughly enjoyed your analysis on ‘reign v. rein.’ Very well written, and fun! I look forward to your next piece.”

—William D. Ortiz, Associate Attorney, Weinberg Wheeler Hudgins Gunn & Dial, Atlanta, GA
