

Elijah's Wisdom on Supplication Prayer

Stanza 1

*The prophets cried to Baal in vain,
Their chants rose up, but none gave rain.
Their gods were stone, their fire was none—
But heaven's flame proved God alone.*

- This recalls the Mount Carmel showdown (1 Kings 18). Pagan prophets prayed and cried out to Baal, but he was powerless. Their “gods” were empty idols, unable to send fire or rain. The true God revealed Himself with fire from heaven, proving His supremacy. The lesson: false gods cannot answer supplication, only the living God can.

Stanza 2

*I bowed my head, the sky was brass,
The years had scorched both soil and grass.
Yet still I prayed, though demons jeered,
For Yahweh's voice was all I feared.*

- After the fire came the drought's reality: the land was still barren. “Sky was brass” means heaven seemed shut (Deuteronomy 28:23 imagery). Despite the mocking of spiritual opposition (“demons jeered”), Elijah prayed. The point: supplication often happens when everything looks hopeless, but faith clings to God's word above all else.

Stanza 3

*Supplication is the fight,
Knees to earth, yet heart in light.
The battle rages, false gods roar,
But prayer breaks through the spirit's war.*

- Here Elijah teaches that supplication is itself spiritual warfare. The true battle is not fought with weapons but on the knees. False gods may “roar” through culture, voices, and pressures, but persistent prayer pierces through and brings victory in the unseen realm.

Stanza 4

*Seven times, the servant ran,
Till cloud appeared, small as a hand.
From heaven's store, the flood was poured,
By prayer, not sword—the Lord is Lord.*

- This recalls Elijah sending his servant seven times before the tiny cloud appeared (1 Kings 18:43–44). Supplication requires persistence even when results are invisible. The breakthrough came not by military might or human strength, but through prayer, showing that the Lord alone holds the power to provide.

Stanza 5

*So lift your cry when darkness stands,
When idols rule in hostile lands.
The fiercest war is won in prayer,
For God still reigns—His power is there.*

- The conclusion calls readers to action: when the world feels dark, when idols dominate culture, the true weapon is supplication prayer. The fiercest war (against sin, false worship, despair, or spiritual darkness) is won not in human effort but in God's presence. God still reigns, and His power answers those who humbly call on Him.
