Hello everyone! Welcome to mid-October!
What? Really? Already?

I need to start on the design of this year's Christmas window. For those who don't know, I paint a holiday scene on our library window each season.

And yep, this is me, smiling up at my mommy. I've been thinking about her a lot lately.

Under normal circumstances I'd say I told you so. But, as I have told you so with such vehemence and frequency already, the phrase has lost all meaning. Therefore, I will be replacing it with the phrase, "I have informed you thusly".

– Sheldon Cooper (Big Bang Theory)

Titles Available to Public Libraries

As I mentioned in an earlier newsletter, per changes to Amazon's Kindle Unlimited (KU) program exclusivity restrictions I am now allowed to offer ebook editions of my titles to public libraries. And so, I have been working with a third-party distribution platform, preparing each of my titles and uploading them to their database. As each submission requires modifications to manuscript format and a unique ISBN number, the process is taking a bit of time, but I do see the finish line up ahead.

It should be noted that few titles offered to public libraries get picked up by a public library, but I felt it important that my books be made available.

Taking a look at KHDZ

There's been some additional interest in KHDZ the last few weeks (both novella and screenplay). It's always been popular, but I have to admit that I don't know where this additional attention is coming from.

To be sure, it is quite the unique dark satire fantasy.

Feedback re the novella:

"If you like Neil Gaiman or Terry Pratchett you will enjoy this short book. I was chuckling along from the first couple of pages and the whole book kept me entertained."

Feedback re: the screenplay adaptation:

"The concept is brilliant and eye-catching."

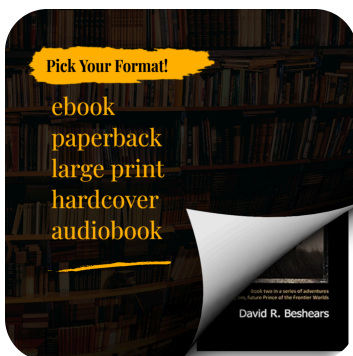

"The situation is entertaining, the shows are fun, and life at the station with all its quirky characters is easy to become invested in... a fun script and a very talented writer."
