

Erin has always known that she wanted to be a writer, dating back to grammar school.

Erin draws a lot of her inspiration from watching forensic shows and cold case files.

Erin also finds inspiration in watching anime, as both she and her husband, C.J., are massive fans.

Transitioning from the workforce to a stay-at-home mother, Erin dedicates as much time as possible to writing more stories.

Erin has stated many times that one of her greatest influences in literary writing is Stephen King.

Erin enjoys anime but is surprisingly very familiar with the manga from which many of these shows derive.

"One of my writing heroes is Stephen King. I've always enjoyed learning about his story and his journey into literature."

"I've always had ideas rattling around up there, but the real joy is being able to put those ideas into a manuscript for someone else to read."

"I enjoy all kinds of books, but I wanted to write in a genre that I have mostly enjoyed and have familiar ties with."

"Writing has always been one of the things that relaxes me the most."

"Sometimes the most difficult part of writing is letting go of something that you feel should have worked, but for some reason, it just didn't pan out."

"I try to write on paper and on the computer because it's always great to have a hard copy."