

“His hardship in life made him stronger.”

“I have known Raul Gonzalez since he was a young boy. However he was never able to live that life as his role was to be the man in charge. That he did. It was a lot of responsibility for him but he didn't mind as that was his duty. He is and has always been a hardworking honest man. His hardship in life made him stronger. Having lived this life, he would make a great politician who understands the needs of the people. Putting them first and not himself. To understand the strife of the people and their needs. Raul, having a large family, wants to see them have the same if not more opportunities than he had. This is what's needed. Put Caymanians first!”
