Safeguarding Supervision

Quality, cost effective safeguarding supervision is possible

Yes! quality, cost effective safeguarding supervision is possible and that is just what we aim to deliver at Woodland Baines. We believe that access to quality safeguarding supervision is so important, we aim to ensure that it is not only accessible to everyone who needs it, but affordable at a frequency that really makes an impact and supports practice.

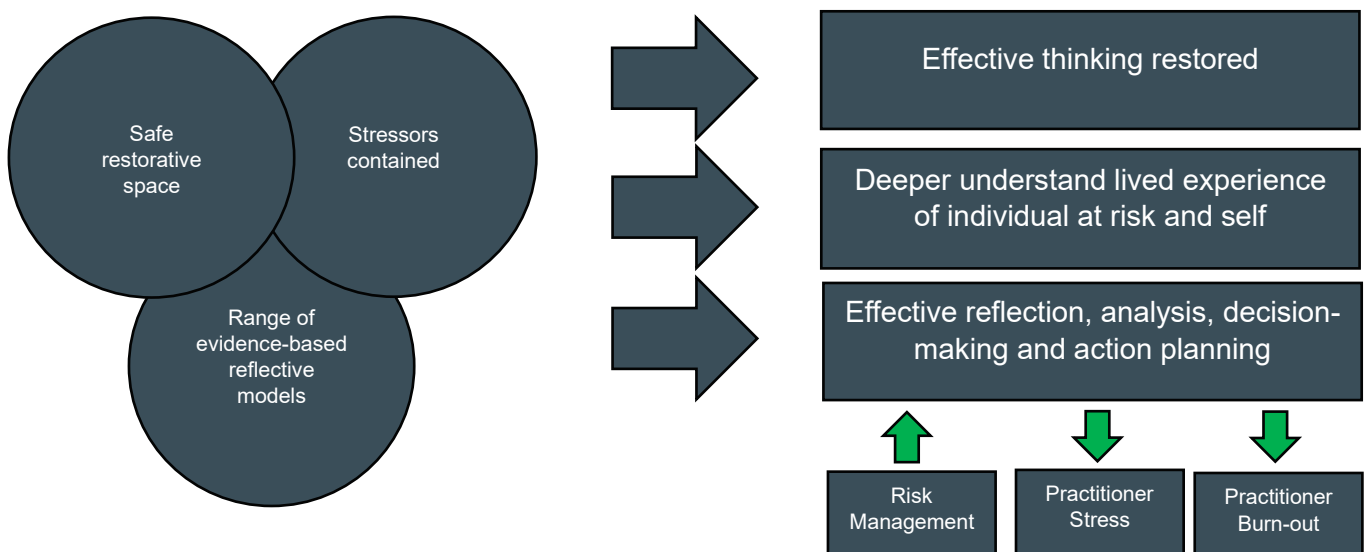

But not all safeguarding supervision is equal. One thing that safeguarding supervision is not, is just a good chat with someone who is easy to talk to. Neither should it be wholly driven by organisational demands and management checks for safe practice. Working positively with emotions is fundamental to the supervisory relationship, and this requires a restorative approach that supports the resilience of the practitioner in their role in addition to promoting reflection and supporting safe practice. This approach is integrated with more traditional supervision cycles and functions such as Morrison's 4x4x4 model.

What should effective safeguarding supervision deliver?

Delivering effective supervision can seem complex. It certainly draws on a broad range of skills, knowledge, and attributes from both the supervisor and the practitioner. It requires the supervisor to create a safe space that helps contain, sometimes overwhelming feelings and pressures. This safe supervisory space supports the practitioner to access their thinking which may have been cloaked by a range of stressors which in turn, may impede effective risk management.

The supervisor's ability, experience and confidence in drawing on a range of supervisory models and techniques helps restore effective thinking and further develops practitioner understanding about the significance of the lived experience of the child or individual at risk.

Restored thinking supports practitioner confidence and acts as a gateway to effective reflection, analysis, and action planning. In a study cited in (Wallbank & Wonnacott, 2015) restorative and reflective supervision sessions decreased practitioner measures of burnout and stress from clinically significant levels, to levels where the practitioner would have been able to think and more effectively manage safeguarding risks.

Taster Sessions

If you are interested in Woodland Baines delivering safeguarding supervision, please do get in touch with us. Initially, we want to find out your personal or organisational supervision needs. At this point we will give you an idea of the likely fees for the package that seems like the best fit for you.

Where your interest is 121 safeguarding supervisions, we may offer you a short no obligation `taster' session ahead of you committing to a block purchase of supervision sessions.

Where your interest is group supervision, we may offer you a short group `briefing' to enable the practitioners in the group to meet the supervisor and think about their objectives ahead of committing to any block purchase.

Supervision Agreements & Notes

All practitioners will have the opportunity to contribute to specific elements of their supervision agreement to ensure;

- ☑ Appropriate boundaries.
- ☑ Shared understanding of the purpose of supervision.
- ☑ Shared understanding of practitioner objectives and needs.

Supervisor notes are incorporated into 121 supervision packages, remain confidential to the practitioner and are despatched securely or may be accessed securely on our system by the practitioner.

Group supervision practitioners should keep their own reflective log.

121 and group supervision practitioners should agree with the supervisor how case notes will be updated with agreed wording for reflection and advice.

The Woodland Baines difference

The Woodland Baines difference, put simply, is about how we want to approach life, and how we want to approach our life's work. We never work with associates or forge organisational alliances where others are not in alignment with the commitments we have made.

- ☑ We are committed to ensuring the voice of children and people affected by exploitation and abuse is at the heart of what we do.
- ☑ We aim to put the needs of the sector, those who have a duty to safeguard and protect, above pure profit
- ☑ We want to deliver exceptional quality services that are accessible, and affordable for all.
