

Court records and transcripts

Records of court proceedings in BC are accessed through court registries.

Court policy

The Court's ACC-2 Access to Court Records policy sets out the general guidelines for who can access which types of court records.

People may access information from court files or hear information when watching court proceedings that may be subject to a publication ban. This means they are prevented from publishing, transmitting or broadcasting that information. The Court's BAN-1 Bans on Publication policy provides some examples of publication bans.

Accessing court records

Court Services Online (CSO)

This is an electronic service of the Ministry of Attorney General which provides online access to some court record information from the Provincial Court and Supreme Court. It also allows e-filing of some documents.

Please note that Integrated Judicial Services and the Office of the Chief Judge do not act as a registry for the Court, and do not process requests to access court records.

BC lawyers access

BC lawyers can access some court records in family and criminal cases through the digital Access to Court Materials platform (ACM). The Law Society uses the BC Wallet app to issue credentials to lawyers to access ACM. To get started, follow the steps and links on the ACM website.

Lawyers using ACM are required to sign an electronic undertaking, including to adhere to the terms of any applicable court access policies and publication bans. Before using ACM, lawyers must review the undertaking and the access policies to ensure they know the rules. Lawyers' use of the ACM program is subject to audit.

The records available vary by type

- Provincial Court Family Law Act, Family Maintenance Enforcement Act and Child, Family and Community Service Act records such as pleadings, orders and court summary sheets are accessible using the ACM program
- Criminal Informations, records of proceedings, digital audio recording system (DARS) recordings and DARS log notes are accessible using the ACM program
- ACM does not provide access to traffic matters, youth court matters, court records that have been sealed or in camera hearings

Transcripts

A court transcript is a written account of what was said during a court proceeding. In cases where the judge has read their decision in the courtroom, the judge's decision could also be transcribed as part of the proceedings.

Order court transcripts

Publicly accessible transcripts of court proceedings can be prepared upon request, for a fee. You will need to know:

- Where the proceedings took place
- The date of the proceeding
- The court file number

You can order a transcript online. You can also contact the court registry where the matter was heard to get details about the company that prepares transcripts.
