The Amen Corner

As something of a defensive measure against my mother's cooking, I began learning to cook at about 8. On Saturday mornings, I'd get up at about 4 AM and work to feed myself. I was slow to figure out Hershey's Cocoa didn't have the same mixing properties as Nesquik. Eggs were a challenge. As a definite defensive measure against my mother's wrath, I stacked kitchen chairs against the door, saving one to help me climb up into cabinets and stand at the stove. One fateful day, I went through close to a dozen before I dropped something loud enough to wake my mom. She poured pass that blocked door like it was a restraining order. Egg frying lessons were suspended. Later in the day, she asked me why I was in such a bad mood. I replied, "You'd be in a bad mood too if you broke your yolks!" It doesn't take much to ruin someone's day I guess.

I knew someone in Arkansas whose entire week hung in the balance of a Razorback football or basketball game. That made for a lot of spoiled weeks. Sounds funny when its someone else's team, doesn't it? A man was once annoyed I invariably said 'A-men' at the end of prayers with a long 'a'. He much preferred the short 'a' version and I wanted to oblige him, but in the heat of prayer, I'd forget. He got mad enough at my countrified ways, he quit coming. I sought rabbinical consultation and asked my friend, Gene Levy, "Which is correct, 'A-men or Ah-men.'" He replied, "Ahmunee."

This morning I read, "You can love the snow or hate it, and live through a day still having snow." There's something to that. Days come to us as they do and our accepting them as they come makes a difference. Snow comes, but so do days of 100 degrees. Some things are a matter of personal taste and our teams win and lose. When cracking eggs, yolks will sometimes be broken. Are any of these reason enough to ruin an irreplaceable day of life? No, they're not, yet we let it happen. Clyde Carmack wrote, "Nothing matters if it doesn't matter forever." Some things do matter forever. Family members matter, even when they drive us mad. Staying on speaking terms with God matters, even when it includes a lot of "I'm sorry." Knowing the sun is shining, even when dark skies block its light, matters. I vote for making these things the important things in our lives. I still despise a broken yolk. Amen!

Glad to be your pastor,
Arnold

MY TEAM SUNDAY

On February 2, I'll be dressed in enough purple to make you think TCU won the Big 12. You may want to wear Crimson or Orange. You might even prefer that garish red and teller! There are other color choices because there are other teams, college and professional, but it's Super Bowl Sunday so let's have fun! I have purple stuff to share.

Thank You Notes

Dear Church Family,

As I continue my recovery from back surgery, my loving church family continues to reach out and nurture me every day. If it's not a card in the mail, it's a meal. If it's not a visit to my home, it's a prayer. I'm grateful for all the love and care I've been shown.

Thank you,
Patty Jennings

The Toy Shop thanks you for your kind and generous donations. We exist because of caring hearts. Thank you from all of us at the Toy Shop!

Kim Davis

Dear Friends of the Food Bank,

Thank you for your generous gift to the Regional Food Bank of Oklahoma's Food for Kids Program in Duncan. Your donation helps provide food for the 1 in 4 Oklahoma children who live with daily food insecurity. In the last year, our Food for Kids Programs helped provide more than 2.8 million meals to nearly 42,000 chronically hungry children in the state. That includes children like Madison, who we recently met at an Oklahoma City school. She receives food before weekends and holiday breaks thanks to the Backpack Program. "Usually, I can't go to sleep if I'm hungry, it feels bad that I don't have enough food to eat... it helps a lot to have food because we're always starving," Madison said. For Madison and all Oklahomans served by the Regional Food Bank, thank you for Fighting Hunger...Feeding Hope.

Gratefully,
Cassie Gilman

CFO of Regional Food Bank of Oklahoma
