

How to collaborate - and what to not collaborate on

If we take the survival of the human race as the ultimate example for how to create the most positive possible outcome foreseen, there will be a need for more than two to ten people. A group of ten people can survive, but this group can also be responsible for the distinction of the human race, as a result of outnumbered conscious beings, or animals, living on this planet. If we are to thrive we all need to distinguish who's making it worse, and who is making it better. This will again be decided by your own morals and values (and the people, hopefully), of what is the best decision making regarding what the future might bring. It can bring destruction or it can bring joy. One nation might see possibilities and some will see failure. In any circumstances, it is assured that you do not want to collaborate with Mogadishu, as an example. A hundred years ago, society was different, but in the 20s it is a sure fact that Somalia as a nation should not be wanted in any other nation without proper integration. It is hard to say, but you should consider to be agreeable on this subject (or matter), since there are a bunch of pirates stealing others' properties and belongings. It is a f disgrace to the organised 'developed' countries, who are trying to help.

Question one: If nationality does not matter because you are supporting the extreme leftists, why would you let a person with no willingness to integrate (besides how to f you over) be a mayor or any other government official?

Question two: If Earth is functioning properly, why do you have to pick a side?

Question three: How do you interpret the word 'properly'? And is it because it has 'always' been done this way?

When it comes to collaboration, there are feelings involved. If there are not any feelings involved, history is involved. History about how you, or your nation, survived in a dangerous situation. If you forget you are a backstabber, and no one wants to collaborate with a backstabber (Norway as an example), you lack both patriotism and history knowledge. We can collaborate about one thing which is not important, and not collaborate on something which is much more important for others. This is where globalisation comes into the situation.

An example: Globalisation will be the death of the human race. The ETs will never interfere with an ant colony.

So, go f yourself because you want to exploit another nation where there is some form of stability. Egocentric.

Class distinction within a society or a nation works 'perfectly' fine, but it does not work between nations.
