

How to judge a judge (Statsansatteloven §27)

Note: This document is mainly regarding the Norwegian '§Children's Law§'.

Illustration: We all have to tolerate criticism. Also world leaders

If your nation has a tendency to operate in something similar to Norwegian judges regarding children's welfare or child care, your nation has already lost. The numbers within 10 years will tell you this, but not necessarily within which kind of economic field it will 'drain' the money from. Tax income, health issues, and other fields also..

Since a judge has (intentionally) a high ranked position as a result of the judicial power, it is considered as part of the high level hierarchy. This will/might result in a misuse of power. They are human beings, just as you are. They can decide and shout, and be directly rude without any consequences at all. And if you tell others about such an experience, the answer is 'obey'. Since these judges are human beings, they are also most likely to be a very nice person when they are not seated as citizens working for the people doing a job, related to their own point of view.

So, let's say that you are being convicted, but you are innocent. Then you can always remember that this is what you have been paying taxes for your whole life. And people still do not understand why the court system can not achieve law and order properly. A f joke. Every cornerstone of your system probably needs psychology implemented.

Question 1:

What to do with these judges?

Answer:

Corrupt judges -> deported

Incompetent judges -> removed from office (lose their license)

- This requires a highly functional up to date system, where the involved do not lie in their declaration

Question 2:

High ranked government officials are aware of a certain illegal situation, why do they not do anything about it?

Answer:

Lack of moral values, stupidity and/or corruption.

Of all the subjects in your law book, corruption (within contributonal psychology 'experts') is most likely to happen regarding disagreements about children between two parents.
