

State system regulative systems - and its advances

When the system tries to adapt to danger, it adapts. There are different management systems for each country. Every one of those has a tendency to work out properly regarding the majority that is being withheld imprisoned by the power rule of human evolution, and again, what is safe. It is about trust and also the self. If it works out good in the form of still being alive, for the being, the being will think that: this happened to me and I'm pretty fine, so it will probably work out for you. If you want to gain trust within your community; show who you are and what you are trying to achieve in a way that the people understand and can relate to. The power will gain trust - 100%. To be mysterious only works in a love relationship. Poweraware, spoken and written. This is Norway: 50 years in a strong democratic country, where we have built our government with trust since the second world war, and it does not function well with immigration. So every other citizen is being affected by the changes done. Get your act together.

An example:

A strong democratic country needs a sudden change because of the future generations: We will fix it with our prime minister, it will take approximately seven years.

A dictator or something in between needs a sudden change because of the future generations: I can fix it today, if you have understanding and knowledge around the subject.

Values and morals are but only environmental, combined in some cases with parental advice.
