

The choices of two

If the global muslim situation is natural, they will be destroyed with time. This is seen as a result of a mind used solely towards Allah. If it is intentional as a result of miscalculating, it is a direct result of a human being not being very intelligent, or grounded to the society on this planet. An example for understanding follows:

Two choices; this planet is a circus vs. position wise it is ok the way it is

So, if you are in a position to actually take a day off of work and go by every other person you meet with an intention that this will either guide me or it just very energy wise cost effective, you will most likely be frustrated and bored or happy to enjoy the now and what it has to offer, or offend you as a piece of shit low self esteem b*.

You can always choose. You will always get two choices towards a situation. To engage or not engage. Like either yes or no. Both of them will literally place you in a way different position. And if you care it engages you further.

If your free will is seen by what you manage to decide which you either believe or choose to believe, free will might be a summoned word for something we have no knowledge of. We lack knowledge on free will. We lack measures.

Question: If you are happy with every choice you make, you reflect on bad choices and maybe weep a little, is it more difficult to focus and what to do vs. what you've done and of course also considering people involved?

Reflection is probably human beings' best defence system. But, if you reflect out of a very closed mind, such as believers of Allah, reflection for/regarding a whole planetary civilization is more negative than positive. Cut the crap, what the f of a joke religion. "Death to all Americans!" while other nations will explore other star systems.

An example: I'd rather trust Allah than highly evolved ET's. Due to prosperity for my own learned belief system on what is more important. Islam is obviously more important than prosperity for the whole globe. Jihad!!!. Joke=!

Now, get your act together. We do not have time for this, contradicting Lao Tzu's proverb

