Turning Even Hotter For ALL Parts (UK & Ireland) From This Weekend & Into Next Week/Late June...

There are no major changes to report upon for later this week in terms of those expected very hot to even extreme temperature ranges building in across our shores and also in terms of our earlier and overall duration of at least 7-10 from the key dates of June 22-24 either.

It is now also likely to bring temperatures into the mid-high 30s, at the very least from around Sunday of this week and also into the whole of the following week, with some variation from very warm to hot and potentially hotter, starting 22nd June on the basis of the now repeatedly repeated forecast projections from both the Global Forecast System (GFS) and the European Computer Model (ECM) also see comments.

ALL our repeatedly repeated and digitally-dated forecasts over the last several weeks in the provided and chronologically dated links below and with clearly demonstrated and accurate pictorial illustrations for these exact dates and 'start dates' and for the expected and bigger and more extravagant to even extreme heat event from 'around JUNE 22-24':

Happy Monday evening/Tuesday all and it looks hot, hot, hot and even hotter...

We'll touch on this again in a few days time...
