

James H. Davis is the Buelher Endowed Professor of Management, the Chairman of the Marketing and Strategy Department, the Executive Director of the Steven R. Covey Leadership Center and the Director of Executive Education in the Jon M. Huntsman School of Business at Utah State University. Prior to that he was the John F. O’Shaughnessy Professor of Family Enterprises and Professor of Strategic Management in the Mendoza College of Business at the University of Notre Dame for over twenty-five years. He has numerous publications on strategy, trust, stewardship theory, entrepreneurship, social capital, corporate governance and family business. The Academy of Management Review recognized his trust research as the most influential theory article of the decade. He has worked with many major national and multinational corporations throughout the world on strategic planning and positioning. He has chaired the ethics education committee in the Academy of Management and the Corporate Strategy and Governance Committee in Strategic Management Society. He is the Chairman of the Board for STEP (Successful Transgenerational Enterprise Program). He earned his Doctor of Philosophy in corporate strategy and organization theory from the University of Iowa.