

The background of the image shows three bottles of Martvilis Marani Aladasturi wine. The bottles are dark glass with white labels. The labels feature a black line drawing of a person's head and shoulders, and a small illustration of a wine glass at the bottom. The text on the labels reads "Martvilis Marani" and "Aladasturi". The bottles are slightly out of focus, and the background is dark with some bokeh light effects.

Georgia isn't just another wine country—it's where winemaking began, over 8,000 years ago. Here, wine isn't just a drink; it's part of the culture, the traditions, and the way people celebrate life. What makes Georgian wine so special? It's the ancient method they still use today. Grapes, skins, stems, and all are fermented in big clay pots called qvevris, buried underground. This natural process creates wine that's earthy, complex, and full of life.

Natural wine has a lot in common with Georgian traditions. It's about letting the grapes speak for themselves—no additives, no shortcuts, just honest, pure wine. In every glass, you can taste the land, the care, and the history behind it
