What are Your Values 1?

Actions Speak Louder than Words

If the NNU is voted in, most likely the people who are being most active in the organization now will be voted in as our union leadership. We can learn a lot by the types of behaviors we are seeing now to help us determine how they will behave at leaders and, most importantly, a representative of you and your values.

Does This Behavior Represent You?

Bulletin Boards where non-union support materials are torn down but union support materials remain? Lockers “wallpapered” with union support materials without the permission of the people assigned these lockers?

What about union support material being posted in-patient transport areas; do our patient's need to be brought into this when they are at their most vulnerable? What about 40 union supporters “yelling,” “chanting,” “clapping hands” in the administration building where patients, visitors, and fellow Hopkins staff felt concerned, abused, and threatened as these people refused to leave, refused the offer of having scheduled 1:1 meeting with Deb Baker, and security had to have a presence? Is this type of aggressive behavior within your core values? Is this the behavior for which you would want to be associated?
