NNU Supporters “Demand an end to the anti-union campaign”.

Additionally, we question the hiring of Littler Mendelson, a law firm well known for intentionally encroaching on nurses' ability to organize a union. It is astounding that Johns Hopkins Hospital would spend so much of the facility's resources on an anti-union campaign. Those funds should be spent providing the staff and resources needed to take care of our patients.

With all the efforts to fight the nurses' basic right to organize, it is hard to believe that administration truly cares about nurses in the way that you claim to. How can we trust that our voices will be heard when management is attempting to undermine our rights and silence us? On April 2nd at Monday's Town Hall meeting you stated that you think a great way to avoid further division of nurses is to keep talking and educating one another. We wholeheartedly agree with that statement. However, by only affording people with views that align with those of JHH administration the access to reach every nurse in the hospital, you are sending a message that anyone with differing experiences, opinions, or information is not as important.

We demand an end to the anti-union campaign and that Johns Hopkins Hospital management allows us to exercise our rights to collectively organize for union representation with National Nurses United.

Sincerely,

You Have the Right to Hear Both Sides

The non-union supporters that are bringing you these flyers are a grass-root group of Hopkins Nurses whose positions will fall into the bargaining unit (union) positions if NNU is voted in at JHH. The information we are providing is coming from us researching on our own time and at our own expense. The NNU supporters have received materials prepared by NNU at NNU's expense. Some of them have received training from NNU on how to proceed with organizing efforts and it is that training that is currently being used by NNU supporters.

We believe strongly all nurses make the best decisions when they have all the necessary information. You wouldn't treat a patient for sepsis, just because they have a fever, would you?
