

Legacy of Debt

Helen Paul

his is a didactic fiction on the ethics of integrity written with the use of first-person narrative technique.

Lorrita had inherited wealth from her late grandfather who had made the money by a valiant deed to an affluent man. She and her husband were made to promise that the money inherited will be used to assist those who were struggling entrepreneurs. The duo kept the promise but some of the borrowers did not keep to the terms of the lending thus almost plunging their benefactors into penury.

The law of karma came into play and the people who would not keep to their promises had themselves to blame while the ones who did prospered. Other secrets that were well-kept by the patriarchs and matriarch of old were later exposed thus weaving some form of suspense into the story.
