

A mother and daughter walked into a space filled with unity, mentorship, and sisterhood. They were not alone—sisters and granddaughters stood beside them, all connected by something greater: Lambda Kappa Omega.

Each woman had a desire to join, not just for herself, but for the legacy she would help build. Guided through the membership process, Started they attended Rush and Learn sessions, participated in meetings, and prepared for something meaningful.

There were fees to pay, commitments to honor, and a learning process to complete. Yet none of that outweighed the purpose—family-based growth and the preservation of something lasting.

At the National Conference, everything came together.

Through the ceremony, they were no longer just individuals—they became part of a shared a legacy.

A legacy where a mother, daughter, sister, and granddaughter could stand side by side, not only as family—but as sorors.

And in that moment, they weren't just joining an organization...

They were becoming together.

What Are we talking about?