

In addition, Maritime Services are closely involved with the new Global Maritime Distress and Safety System (GMDSS) which will be mandatory for all ships by the end of the nineties.

The new equipment and systems which will be introduced progressively from 1992 will cater for both safety and general communications needs of the wide variety of ships depending on their areas of operation. BT is ready to offer its advice to shipping companies to help unravel the workings of GMDSS.

Above all, the experience and expertise of BT Maritime Services means that, when ship-board operators want to make sure of the connection, they can depend on BT.
