Irma and Sisko – Australia’s Got Talent Semi Finalist 2016

When Leigh invited me to write a story about our experience with Australia’s Got Talent 2016 (AGT) – I accepted - but it left me with a Dilemma -- What will I write? You see - it is not a simple request – AGT – I could write a Novel – so much happened – emotions travelled the full array - from the height of ecstasy to the depth of despair – many times over – our white knuckled Emotional Roller Coaster Ride travelled a span of nearly 6 months. It felt like the world’s biggest and longest Roller Coaster – and along the way - so many cherished great stories – so many unforgettable disasters – character building - lesson learned. In the end – looking back - Even I am surprised at the high exposure – the below links are not all the links and not all that was published, shown, or created.

Now I ponder – what will I write?

Most of you envision the start of our journey as being the Judges’ Audition (Melbourne) – OK – we will start here. By now we are in top (or final) 150 Australian ACTS - Yes AGT is entertainment – and yes – weird and controversy makes for good viewing - for the record we are in this clip - Australia’s Weirdest Talent Australia’s Got Talent 2016 – (we are second one listed) <https://www.9now.com.au/australias-got-talent/2016/clip-cikdnxaf001udpozvvi5u136/4f963196-447b-4dd2-9c71-fe29a9f3cad7> -- We Loved It.

Back on subject - the strange, weird, funny, unique, makes entertainment -- so -- imagine their delight when Sisko and I come along – we didn’t need coaxing – some of the below links will testify to that – whether it be the many interviews or on stage - we made agreeable fools of ourselves - all by ourselves – we loved seeing how everyone enjoyed us – which of course encouraged us more (as if we needed encouragement).

Who knew? Thanks Eddie - I will happily accept “Delightfully eccentric” – We loved Dicko – in my view – I think his inner child identified with my inner child who is enjoying dancing with her dog.

Sophie got to experience Sisko 1st hand – great dancing partner for her. Kelly – was pleasantly surprised – that I was “funny”

Dave – quickly worked out – Sisko likes food – Pizza is a good option – Dave had one ready at the Semi Finals (no onions) of course - Sisko called Dave his best friend.

All the Crew including top management – treated us (every performer) very well - true British Courtesy - could not be faulted. There was however one guy who threw daggers at me both times we met – I actually thought he was a fellow South Aussie – whatever his problem was – was none of my business – and he never said.

All joking aside – many (literally) thousands (1000s) applied – I was proud of Sisko’s performance – Sisko had to qualify 3 times to get to the Semi Finals (now only 30 Acts left) – and including the Semi Finals (4th performance) – Sisko performed Perfectly – plus all the Off Stage performances –

I am so proud of him – as trainer/handler/owner/companion/carer – Sisko did us so proud – Sisko’s appearances and performances – could not be faulted – ever – on stage, off stage, travelling, hotels, motels, restaurants, - everywhere – not a single time was I embarrassed – I never had to make excuses for Sisko and NEVER had to ask for special conditions or circumstances – Sisko faced everything with serene calm (no grammar error - Sisko was double super calm) . Sisko mingled and danced with fellow performers during some short on set “down time” – yes – I am ever so proud of Sisko.

Love and Hugs

PDODC Flyball Class Times - Mondays (pm)

6.30pm Set-up and Dog assessment

6.45pm. Beginners

7.30pm Intermediate / Triallers

Weather rule - If the temperature for Monday is forecast on Sunday evening for 32 degrees or higher, there will be no training. If stormy or inclement weather, training may also be called off.

Flyball Report

Hi everyone,

Our first comp is fast approaching.

And training has been sporadic to say the least.

With all the rain the grounds have barely held up, and training has been cancelled for the safety of the dogs and handlers.

So we are training hard when we can for both our comp in August and the Royal Show.

Anyone interest in Flyball is welcome to come out and "have a go". We train on Monday nights starting at 6:30pm.

Flyball is a rally race between two teams of four dog

The first dog on each team races over four jumps, trigger a box for a ball than back over the four jumps... then the second dog goes.

The first team to have all four dogs race down and back wins!!

It's a fun sport, and if you decide to join us.. you dog need to be a minimum of 12 months old and have the equivalent of Grade three obedience.

Cheers

20 Dog Myths — Debunked!

<http://www.petful.com/misc/20-ridiculous-dog-myths-debunked/>

Garlic for fleas, hating on cats, attacking mail carriers, colour-blindness -- those are just a few of the 20 myths busted here.

Dog myths have been around since the domestication of dogs, and some of them stick around even today. Which ones are true and which ones are full of hot air? Here we list the 20 most ridiculous dog myths we see time and time again — and then debunk them one by one.

Myth #1: Only male dogs hump other dogs.

My last two female dogs can easily prove this one wrong. They both took a ride on each other, people and objects. They were both female and were spayed as soon as they were old enough. Research tells us the behavior is an act of dominance and is perfectly normal.

Myth #2: Indoor dogs don't need heartworm prevention.

Tell that to the mosquito that just flew inside your house and eyed your dog like a buffet station. Mosquitoes spread heartworms, and they can land on your pet indoors or outdoors. Heartworm prevention is very important to your dog's health. A dog infected with heartworms faces a long, expensive treatment process, and that's only if the damage isn't too severe when found.

Myth #3: Giving your dog leftovers will reduce waste.

While your trash can or bin won't fill as quickly, you could be feeding your dog harmful bones, high-fat content foods and even ingredients that are toxic to your dog. Cooked bones are especially known for splitting and splintering, and just imagine what those splinters could do to your dog's internal organs. Other issues involve gastrointestinal problems and pancreatic concerns. Do your dog a favor and stick to dog food and treats. If you want to reduce waste, try composting instead.

Myth #4: Dogs eat grass only if they are sick.

Ancestors such as wolves ate an entire animal — stomach contents included. Small prey animals usually fed off of grasses and berries, and that's most likely where the taste for grass originated. Most recent research indicates that quite simply put, dogs just like to eat grass. If the grass is treated with chemicals then it could be hazardous to your pet. Some vets do believe that dogs will intentionally consume large amounts of grass to induce vomiting if they feel unwell or have consumed something toxic, but this should not be consistent behavior. Same goes for too much of a good thing; eating too much grass (or too often) may incur a trip to the vet's office.

Myth #5: A dog will be fine in the car as long as you crack the windows.

Never, ever do this, even if you think you are only running out for a minute. Even in cool temperatures the heat inside a vehicle can rise quickly, and this is even more dangerous in warmer temperatures. Leaving your dog inside the vehicle is as bad as placing your dog in an oven and turning up the heat.

Myth #6: A dog's mouth is cleaner than a human's mouth.

Did you not see your dog lick his butt or eat the neighbor's dog's poop? While it's true most of the germs in a dog's mouth are dog-specific and harmless, that does not include where your dog's mouth might have been. Licking the concrete, eating grass, lapping up dirty rain water, sampling the neighboring dog's poop and all kinds of undigestibles you would never eat yourself can make their way onto your face or in your mouth. Dogs that do not get their teeth brushed can also have tarter buildup and excess bacteria. Another possibility is worms. Humans can get worms from dogs without noticing it until symptoms appear. Imagine that the poop your dog sampled has microscopic worms that are easily transmitted. Even just a lick of the butt can have the same effect. Still want to offer a sloppy wet kiss?

Myth #7: Dogs are colorblind.

The canine retina indicates that dogs can see some colors, primarily blues, yellows, greens and shades of gray.

Myth #8: Calculate a dog's age by multiplying human years times seven.

Recent research and media have reported this method as outdated. By the time your dog is one year old she's already a teenager, and extra years get added as the dog gets older.

Myth #9: A wagging tail is a sign of a happy dog.

This is not always true. Tail wagging can also be a sign of fear, anxiety or impending aggression. The tail may wag slower, erratically or while inverted on a dog's back. Look at the total body language before approaching a dog you don't know.

Myth #10: Female dogs need to have one litter of puppies before they can be spayed.

This myth is one of the worst — and one that keeps overpopulation a constant problem. Dogs do not have to produce a litter before they can be altered. There is no evidence that proves this method offers any health benefits, yet there is ample evidence that spaying reduces the frequency of future health problems while reducing overpopulation. Not all dogs are natural mothers, and keep in mind that you can't predict a litter size. Imagine you allowed your dog just that one first litter and out comes 11 puppies. When you can't care for them or find homes or adopters, they end up at the shelter.

Myth #11: Breeds on the banned list are always aggressive and will attack anyone given the chance.

Myths like these only add fuel to the fire that is breed-specific legislation (BSL). Any dog can be aggressive without proper (or with improper) socialization and training. The CDC concluded that no dog is born inherently dangerous or vicious, and the American Temperament Test Society results show some of these "aggressive and dangerous" dogs higher up on the friendly end than other dogs we think are harmless.

My dog is one bulky and strong canine. She will play, wrestle, let me take her bones away or play with her food — anything.

She's not aggressive in the slightest way and is awesome with kids (my niece and nephew can attest to that fact). She is, however, very protective against strangers. If you tried to harm me or enter my home uninvited, I'd almost guarantee she'd take a chunk out of you. Does that make a dog worthy of being labeled dangerous? Not in my book.

Myth #12: All large dogs are dangerous.

This one is just plain nuts. Have you read our recent breed profile of the Newfoundland? Those dogs can get upwards of 150 pounds or more and they are as harmless as a stuffed teddy bear. My aunt's two Great Danes think they are tiny lapdogs, and many other large dogs can easily debunk this myth. Other than accidentally knocking someone over because of their size, many large dogs are just puppies in big packages.

Myth #13: Dogs get all the exercise they need in the backyard.

Dogs go outside to do their business and maybe investigate around, but they are natural pack animals and want to be by your side. Unless you're outside in the yard with them encouraging play and exercise, plan to take your dog for a daily walk, hike, swim or any activity that gets them moving. Regular exercise helps promote stable weight and increases health benefits.

Myth #14: You can't teach an old dog new tricks.

This has to be the oldest myth about older dogs, and it's still not true. Many older dogs may suffer limited hearing or vision that prevents them from learning or following commands easily, but age is not a determining factor for tricks or training.

Myth #15: A dry or warm nose is a sign your dog is sick.

Dog noses are not always cool and wet, and occasional dryness is perfectly normal. There are also many reasons your dog may have a dry nose. A runny nose, colorful discharge or a crusty buildup is not good, so head to the vet if you notice these symptoms.

Myth #16: Dogs hate mail carriers.

Most dogs are protective of their family and their home, and the dog recognizes the mail carrier as a stranger who needs to keep a distance. Unless you have had the same mail carrier for years and your dog has had a chance to socialize with him or her, expect a bark.

Myth #17: All dogs hate cats.

While it's true some dogs may give chase and the cat may hiss and flick a paw or two, this myth is false and easy to disprove.

The reality

Myth #18: A little chocolate won't hurt.

Chocolate can be toxic and life-threatening to dogs. As little as 1 ounce of dark chocolate may be enough to kill a small dog. Keep the chocolate for yourself and nobody gets hurt

Myth #19: You have to rub the dog's nose in pee to potty train.

There are many successful ways to potty train a dog, and none of them include rubbing your dog's nose in pee.

Myth #20: Don't waste your money on flea and tick products. Just feed your dog lots of garlic.

Garlic may keep pests at bay during a short walk, but it should not be seen as a preventive. Opinions differ on the consumption of garlic by dogs, but most agree that trace amounts are okay. The difficulty with garlic is knowing at what amount it becomes toxic to your dog. It is best to avoid giving your dog garlic for this reason and stick with your vet's recommendations for flea and tick prevention. Too much garlic can cause an anemic reaction, gastrointestinal problems and red blood cell damage, according to the ASPCA.

President's Report

'There is an awful lot wrong with the world; not enough peace, patience or understanding for it to be considered perfect. But one thing it's not short of is potential. There are many ways in which it can be improved – in fact, it's so bewildering that it's hard to know where to start.' (Source: Oscar Cainer, The Advertiser, 22 July 2016)

I was reading my star sign of which this was the beginning and I thought how profound and how true. Every dog and handler that comes to the club has potential, the potential to be anything from an obedience star to an agility star or just be the very best dog the owner has ever had. How we as instructors find that potential within each dog and how we harness that potential within every handler is the challenge. As the owner of a young dog, the statement 'It's so bewildering that it's hard to know where to start' is very true, but stick with us and we'll get you there.

Our Facebook page is always a good way to get information and feedback in and out to members, but like all social media it has the potential to become a bit personal at times. Please remember when posting comments can we not be derogatory or negative and nothing that could identify a particular dog or handler. In the past the committee has deleted comments and reprimanded members for these reasons. Like my mum always said, 'If you can't say anything nice, say nothing at all'. Please address any complaints direct to the committee either via email or in a letter to be discussed and dealt with at committee meetings.

You will notice that our shop is now finished and is being fitted out. Once it's refined, it will be a valuable asset to the club. Thanks, Ray, for your involvement in this project.

Julian Stokes

Head Obedience Instructor's Report

Hi all. Well, hasn't the weather been absolutely revolting of late? It's amazing to see that, even though it has been so cold and wet, we are still getting good numbers coming to the club each week. If you put the effort in to get down there, we'll put the effort in to teach.

At an obedience delegates meeting it was brought up about the number of triallers declining. A number of factors were brought up:

The growth of 'professional trainers' who discourage competition;

The growth of animal welfare activists promoting 'force-free training' and discouraging dog owners from joining affiliated dog clubs;

The increased focus on pet training rather than performance training;

Triallers becoming less willing to travel from one end of town to the other.

These are all very valid points and need to be looked at a lot deeper. There has been a growth of professional trainers and so on, but many of these trainers have minimal experience and only one point of view towards training.

As for force-free training, we advocate positive reinforcement, which to me is the same thing, although sometimes you do need to be quite firm with some dogs.

As for the focus on pet dog training rather than performance training, when I take people in first timers I always ask what they want from the club and it is nearly always a well-behaved, socialized dog that walks nicely and is reasonably obedient.

The whole dog

world seems to have shifted away from competition towards companionship. And in today's society we are becoming so time poor that driving for hours to a competition and being there all day is of a low priority.

One final point. There have been complaints about the throwing of toys, etc., in front of the canteen areas. As a result of this, we are banning the throwing of all toys while not in class, be it a ball, dumbbell, or any training item, directly in front of the canteen, office, or shed. If you need to throw a toy, please go to the side of the canteen or out the back of the oval where you will not distract the dogs working in class.

26 Agility Report

Between 25th May and 29th May this year, SA held the National Agility Trials. There were competitors from all around the county and New Zealand. There were over 620 dogs entered, with over 5,800 planned runs. Unfortunately a day and a half was lost due to bad weather and unsafe conditions. This decision, by the SA Agility Nationals Committee, was not made lightly and they adjusted the Open runs (as no Open runs had yet been run) so that instead of 3 heats, then a final, there was only 1 round which was then the finals.

Para was well represented at the Nationals with a few qualifications gained throughout the 5 days. We also had 2 dogs in the Agility Finals with Danni & Gabrielle in 500 Agility Masters and Rose & Rex in 300 Agility Excellent – a great achievement.
