VISITOR REVIEW FROM 1867-

When John Muir, father of the National Park Service, visited our town on his Thousand Mile Walk to the Gulf, he wrote: Arrived at Horse Cave, about ten miles from the great cave (Mammoth Cave). The entrance is by a long easy slope of several hundred yards. It seems like a noble gateway to the birthplace of springs and fountains and the dark treasuries of the mineral kingdom. This cave is in a village [of the same name] which it supplies with an abundance of cold water, and cold air that issues from its fern-clad lips. In hot weather crowds of people sit about it in the shade of the trees that guard it. This magnificent fan is capable of cooling everybody in the town at once.
