The Latest

Electroimpact has completed the pressure testing for the door of the RxAir360 prototype. This was major, as it is the most challenging portion of the pressure testing, which is anticipated to be the most lengthy part of the prototype finalization. We are happy to announce that the door pressure of the prototype has fully passed all tests.

What's Next

Now that the significant step of pressure testing is complete, a few more steps of engineering and testing must be fully completed before submitting to 510K FDA pre-approval. These steps will include pressure testing all viewports (windows, etc.). Once all viewports of the chamber are pressure tested, testing is continued for functionality and complete pressure testing of all valves. These categories are required for FDA approval. Providing there are no leaks or issues with the pressure valves or viewports, completing these tests should take minimal time.

Exciting times!!! Every milestone means the value of the company goes UP!! Our September newsletter should be inspiring with updates as our final stages of testing are being completed with our prototype.
