

Sponsorship is not a donation, but an agreement that aims to form a brand identity and image via increased visibility. It is the act of supporting an event and organization financially. In exchange for supporting a nonprofit, the company gets their name and logo on things like banners, posters, programs and other marketing and communications.

The business objective of sponsorship is to reach a specific target audience and to earn a "halo" for supporting a good cause. Sponsorship is win-win and work-work. Both the nonprofit and the for-profit benefit from the partnership, but success depends on them working together to ensure the other's success.
